THE FIRST ACT

SCENE.—MRS. BAXTER'S sitting-room. A pleasant, well-furnished room. French windows open to the garden, showing flower-beds in full bloom, it being summer time. As the audience looks at the stage there is a door on the left hand side at the back, and from the door a few stairs lead down to the room. Nearer and also on this side is a fireplace. Against this same wall is a flower pot on a table containing a plant in bloom. There is plenty of comfortable furniture about the room.

It is evening after dinner. Lamps are lighted and the windows closed. MR. BAXTER, a man about forty, is seated near a lamp reading "Scribner's Magazine." The door opens and MISS ROBERTS comes in. She is a pretty, honest-looking English girl about twenty-four. She comes towards MR. BAXTER.

MISS ROBERTS.

Mr. Baxter—are you very busy?

MR. BAXTER.

No, Miss Roberts.

MISS ROBERTS.

I want to speak to you.

MR. BAXTER.

Yes. Won't you sit down?

MISS ROBERTS.

Thank you. [She does so.] We shall soon be beginning the summer holidays, and I think after this term you had better have another governess for the girls.

MR. BAXTER.

You want to leave us?

MISS ROBERTS.

I don't want to. I shall be very sorry indeed to go. You and Mrs. Baxter have always been so kind to me. You never treated me like a governess.

MR. BAXTER.

You have been with us so long. We have come to look on you as one of the family.

MISS ROBERTS.

I can't tell you how often I have felt grateful. I don't want to leave you at all, and it will almost break my heart to say good-bye to the children, but I must go.

MR. BAXTER.

[Anxiously.] You are not going to be married?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Smiling.] Oh, no—nothing so interesting—I'm sorry to say.

MR. BAXTER.

Have you told my wife you think of leaving?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Slightly troubled.] I began to tell Mrs. Baxter several times; at the beginning of the term and three or four times since—but she was always too busy or too tired to attend to me; each time she asked me to tell her some other time—until I don't quite know what to do. That's why I've come to you.

MR. BAXTER.

[Slightly disconcerted.] But it's not my place to accept your notice.

MISS ROBERTS.

I know—but if I might explain to you —

MR. BAXTER.

Certainly.

MISS ROBERTS.

It's this. I can't teach the girls anything more. Gladys is nearly twelve and Margery, though she is only nine, is very bright; she often asks me the most puzzling questions—and the truth is—I have not had a good enough education myself to take them any further.

MR. BAXTER.

Aren't they rather young to go to school?

MISS ROBERTS.

I think you need a governess with a college education, or, at any rate, some one who doesn't get all at sea in algebra and Latin.

MR. BAXTER.

I should have thought you might read and study.

MISS ROBERTS.

I used to think so—but I find I haven't the time.

MR. BAXTER.

[Thoughtfully.] Too much is expected of you besides your duties as the children's governess. I've noticed that—but I don't quite see how I can interfere.

MISS ROBERTS.

Please don't trouble, and don't think I'm complaining. I am always glad to be of use to Mrs. Baxter. It's not for my own sake I want a change; it's for the girls'. This is their most receptive age. What they are taught, and how they are taught now, will mean so much to them later on. I can't bear to think they may suffer all their lives through my ignorance.

MR. BAXTER.

[Politely.] Oh—I'm sure——

MISS ROBERTS.

It's very kind of you to say so—but I know what it is. I have suffered myself for want of a thorough education. Of course I had the ordinary kind, but I was never brought up to know or do anything special. I found myself at a great disadvantage when I had to turn to, and earn my own living.

MR. BAXTER.

Gladys and Margery won't have to earn their own livings.

MISS ROBERTS.

No one used to think that I should have to earn mine—till one day—I found myself alone and poor—after the shipwreck—when my father and mother—and my sister ——

[She turns her head away to hide her emotion from MR. BAXTER.]

MR. BAXTER.

[Kindly.] We shall all miss you very much when you go. [Leaning towards her.] I shall miss you very much. [She nods.] We've had such good walks and talks and games of chess.

MISS ROBERTS

[Brightly.] Yes! I've enjoyed them all.

MR. BAXTER.

I hope you have a nice place to go to.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Simply.] I haven't any place to go to. I hoped Mrs. Baxter would help me find a new situation. I can't get one very well without her help, as this is the only place where I have ever been a governess, and after being here four years—[smiles] I must ask Mrs. Baxter to give me a good character.

MR. BAXTER.

[Meditatively.] Four years—it doesn't seem like four years. I don't know though—in some ways it seems as if you had always been here. [Looking at Miss ROBERTS.] It is very honest of you to give up a good situation for a conscientious reason like this.

MISS ROBERTS.

I don't know.

MR. BAXTER.

[As an afterthought.] I suppose it really is your reason for leaving?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Laughing.] It's not very nice of you to compliment me on my honesty one minute and doubt it the next.

MR. BAXTER.

[Seriously.] No, Miss Roberts, no. I don't doubt it. I was only wondering. I thought perhaps there might be some other reason why you find it difficult to live here—why you think it would be wiser not to stay —

MISS ROBERTS.

[Innocently.] No —

MR. BAXTER.

I see. Well—as I leave everything to do with the girls' education to Mrs. Baxter—perhaps you will tell her. Tell her what you have told me.

MISS ROBERTS.

And—will you sit in the room?

MR. BAXTER.

Why? What is going to be the difficulty?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Embarrassed.] I can't explain very well to you—but if you wouldn't mind sitting in the room. [She rises.] I think I hear Mrs. Baxter coming.

[MRS. BAXTER enters. She is a pretty woman about thirty-five, vague in her movements and manner of speaking. She comes down the room as she speaks.

MRS. BAXTER.

I've been wondering where Scribner's Magazine is.

MR. BAXTER.

I have it. Have you been looking for it?

MRS. BAXTER.

No—not looking—only wondering.

MR. BAXTER.

Do you want it ?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Pleasantly.] Not if you are reading it—though I was just half-way through a story.

MR. BAXTER.

Do take it.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Taking magazine.] Don't you really want it ?

[She looks about, selecting the most comfortable chair.]

MR. BAXTER.

It doesn't matter.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling.] Thank you. [She sits.] Oh, Miss Roberts, I wonder if you could get me the cushion out of that chair ?

[Pointing to a chair near a window.]

MISS ROBERTS.

Certainly.

[She brings the cushion to MRS. BAXTER and places it behind her back.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[Settling herself.] Thank you. Now I'm quite comfortable—unless I had a footstool.

MISS ROBERTS.

A footstool?

[She gets a footstool, brings it to MRS. BAXTER and places it under her feet.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Without an attempt to move while MISS ROBERTS is doing this.] Don't trouble, Miss Roberts. I didn't mean you to do that. I could have done it. [When MISS ROBERTS has placed the footstool.] Oh, how kind of you, but you ought not to wait on me like this. [Smiles sweetly.] The paper-knife, please. Who knows where it is? [MISS ROBERTS takes the paper-knife from MR. BAXTER and gives it to MRS. BAXTER. To MR. BAXTER.] I didn't see you were using it, dear, or I wouldn't have asked for it. [To MISS ROBERTS.] As you're doing nothing, would you mind cutting some of these pages? I find there are still a few uncut. [She gives the magazine and paper-knife to MISS ROBERTS, then says smiling sweetly.] Your fingers are so much cleverer than mine. [MISS ROBERTS begins cutting the magazine. MRS. BAXTER leans back comfortably in her chair and says to MR. BAXTER.] Why don't you get something to do?

MR. BAXTER.

[Rising.] I'm going to my room to have a smoke.

[MISS ROBERTS puts the magazine on the table and goes to MR. BAXTER with the paper-knife in her hand.

MISS ROBERTS.

No, Mr. Baxter, please, I want you to help me out. I want you to stay while I tell Mrs. Baxter.

MRS. BAXTER.

What's all this mystery? [Seriously.] Take care you don't snap that paper-knife in two, Miss Roberts.

[MR. BAXTER sits down again.

MISS ROBERTS.

[To MRS. BAXTER.] I was telling Mr. Baxter before you came into the room —

MRS. BAXTER.

[Holding out her hand.] Give me the paper-knife.

[MISS ROBERTS gives her the paper-knife, which she examines carefully.

MISS ROBERTS.

I told you at the beginning of the term, and several times since —

MRS. BAXTER.

It would have been a pity if that paper-knife had been snapped in two. [She looks up pleasantly at MISS ROBERTS.] Yes, Miss Roberts?

MISS ROBERTS.

I was saying that I thought ——

[MRS. BAXTER drops the paper-knife accidentally on the floor.]

MRS. BAXTER.

Oh, don't trouble to pick it up. [MISS ROBERTS picks up the paper-knife and holds it in her hand.] Oh, thank you, I didn't mean you to do that.

MISS ROBERTS.

I was saying ——

MRS. BAXTER.

It isn't chipped, is it?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Nearly losing her temper.] No.

[She marches to the table and lays the paper-knife down.]

MRS. BAXTER.

It would have been a pity if that paper-knife had been chipped.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Facing MRS. BAXTER with determination, and speaking fast and loud.] I said I must leave at the end of the term.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Blandly.] Aren't you happy with us, Miss Roberts?

MISS ROBERTS.

Oh, yes, thank you. Very.

MRS. BAXTER.

Really happy, I mean.

MR. BAXTER.

Miss Roberts feels that Gladys and Margery are getting too old for her to teach.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Glancing her gratitude to MR. BAXTER for helping her.] Yes. [To MRS. BAXTER.] I've taught them all I know; they need some one cleverer; there ought to be a change.

MRS. BAXTER.

I think you do very nicely.

MISS ROBERTS.

You don't know how ignorant I am.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Sweetly.] You do yourself an injustice, dear Miss Roberts.

[MISS ROBERTS turns appealingly to
MR. BAXTER.

MR. BAXTER.

It was the algebra, I think you said, Miss Roberts, that you found so especially difficult?

MISS ROBERTS.

Yes. I've no head for algebra.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Cheerfully.] Neither have I, but I don't consider myself a less useful woman for that.

MISS ROBERTS.

You're not a governess.

MRS. BAXTER.

Who said I was? Don't let us wander from the point, Miss Roberts.

[MISS ROBERTS looks appealingly at
MR. BAXTER again.

MR. BAXTER.

The Latin —

MISS ROBERTS.

Yes, I give myself a lesson at night to pass on to them in the morning—that's no way to do, just keeping a length ahead.

MRS. BAXTER.

Perhaps Mr. Baxter will help you with the Latin. Ask him.

MISS ROBERTS.

I'm afraid even that——

MRS. BAXTER.

Mr. Baxter's a very good Latin scholar.
[Smiling at MR. BAXTER.] Aren't you, dear?

MR. BAXTER.

[Reluctantly.] I read Virgil at school. I haven't looked at him since. After a time one's Latin gets rusty.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Cheerfully.] Rub it up. We might begin now, while you're doing nothing. Ask Miss Roberts to bring you the books.

MR. BAXTER.

Oh, no, dear.

MRS. BAXTER.

Why shouldn't we improve our minds?

[She leans her head back on the cushions.]

MR. BAXTER.

Not after dinner. [To MISS ROBERTS.] I don't see why you want to teach the girls Latin.

MISS ROBERTS.

Mrs. Baxter said she wished them to have a smattering of the dead languages.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Complacently.] I learnt Latin. I remember so well standing up in class and reciting "Hic—haec—hoc"—accusative "hinc—hunc—huc."

MR. BAXTER.

[Correcting her.] Hoc.

MRS. BAXTER.

Huc, my dear, in my book. And the ablative was hibus.

MR. BAXTER.

Hibus!

[MR. BAXTER and MISS ROBERTS both laugh.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[Making wild serious guesses.] Hobibus—no, wait a minute—that's wrong—don't tell me. [She closes her eyes and murmurs.] Ablative—ho—hi—hu—no; it's gone. [She opens her eyes and says cheerfully.] Never mind. [To MISS ROBERTS.] What were we talking about?

MISS ROBERTS.

My ignorance of Latin.

MRS. BAXTER.

I can't say that my knowledge of it has ever been of much service to me. I think Mr. Baxter is quite right. Why teach the girls Latin? Suppose we drop it from the curriculum and take up something else on Latin mornings —

MISS ROBERTS.

[Earnestly to MRS. BAXTER.] I wonder if you realize how much all this means to the girls? Their future is so important.

MRS. BAXTER.

[With the idea of putting MISS ROBERTS in her place.] Of course it is important, Miss Roberts. It is not necessary to tell a mother how important her girls' future is—but I don't suppose we need settle it this evening. [Wishing to put an end to the discussion, she rises, walks towards the table on which stands the flower pot and says amiably.] How pretty these flowers look growing in this pot.

MISS ROBERTS.

Would you rather we discussed it to-morrow, Mrs. Baxter?

MRS. BAXTER.

To-morrow will be my brother's first day here, and he will have so much to tell me after his long absence. I don't think to-morrow would be a good day.

MISS ROBERTS.

The day after ?

MRS. BAXTER.

Oh, really, Miss Roberts, I can't be pinned down like that. [She moves towards MR. BAXTER.] Aren't you and Miss Roberts going to play chess ?

MR. BAXTER.

[Rising.] Miss Roberts seems so anxious to have this thing decided. I told her that anything to do with the girls' education was left to you.

MRS. BAXTER.

Need it be settled this minute ?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Going towards MRS. BAXTER.] I've tried so often to speak to you about it and something must be done.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Resigning herself.] Of course—if you insist upon it—I'll do it now. I'll do anything any of you wish. [She sits down.] I've had a slight headache all day—it's rather worse since dinner; I really ought to be in bed, but I wanted to be up when Tom comes. If I begin to discuss this now I shall be in no state to receive him—but, of course—if you insist ——

MISS ROBERTS.

I don't want to tire you.

MRS. BAXTER.

It would tire me very much.

MISS ROBERTS.

Then I suppose we must put it off again.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling.] I think that would be best. We must thrash it out properly—some day.

[She leans back in her chair.]

MR. BAXTER.

[To MISS ROBERTS, sighing.] I suppose we may as well play chess?

MISS ROBERTS.

[With resignation.] I suppose so.

[MR. BAXTER and MISS ROBERTS sit at a table and arrange the chess men.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[Finding her place in her magazine, begins to read. After a slight pause, she says.] What an abominable light! I can't possibly see to read. I suppose, Miss Roberts, you couldn't possibly carry that lamp over to this table, could you? [MISS ROBERTS makes a slight movement as though she would fetch the lamp.] It's too heavy, isn't it?

MR. BAXTER.

Much too heavy!

MRS. BAXTER.

I thought so. I'm afraid I must strain my eyes. I can't bear to sit idle.

MR. BAXTER.

[Rising.] I'll carry the lamp over.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Quickly.] No, no! You'd spill it. Call one of the servants; wouldn't that be the simplest plan?

MR. BAXTER.

The simplest plan would be for you to walk over to the lamp.

MRS. BAXTER.

Certainly, dear, if it's too much trouble to call one of the servants. [She rises and carries her magazine to a chair by the lamp.] I wouldn't have said anything about the lamp if I'd thought it was going to be such a business to move it. [She sits and turns over a page or two while

MR. BAXTER, who has returned to his seat, and MISS ROBERTS continue arranging the chess board. MRS. BAXTER calls gaily over her shoulder.] Have you checkmated Mr. Baxter yet, Miss Roberts?

MISS ROBERTS.

I haven't finished setting the board.

MRS. BAXTER.

How slow you are. [She turns a page or two idly, then says seriously to MR. BAXTER.] Dear, you'll be interested to know that I don't think the housemaid opposite is engaged to young Locker. I believe it's the cook.

MR. BAXTER.

Very interesting, dear. [To MISS ROBERTS.] It's you to play.

[After three moves of chess, MRS. BAXTER says.

MRS. BAXTER.

Oh, here's such a clever article on wasps. It seems that wasps—I'll read you what it says. [She clears her throat.] Wasps——

MR. BAXTER.

[Plaintively.] Dulcie, dear, it's impossible for us to give our minds to the game if you read aloud.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Amiably.] I'm so sorry, dear. I didn't mean to disturb you. I think you'd have found the article instructive. If you want to read it afterwards, it's page 32, if you can remember that. "Wasps and all about them." I'll dog-ear the page. Oh, I never looked out Tom's train. Miss Roberts, you'll find the time-table on the hall table. [MISS ROBERTS rises and goes on.] Or if it isn't there, it may be ——

MISS ROBERTS.

[Quickly.] I know where it is. [She goes out.]

MRS. BAXTER.

What has Miss Roberts been saying to you about leaving?

MR. BAXTER.

Only what she said to you.

MRS. BAXTER.

I hope she won't leave me before I get suited. I shall never find any one else to suit me. I don't know what I should do without Miss Roberts.

[MISS ROBERTS re-enters with small time-table.]

MISS ROBERTS.

Here it is!

MRS. BAXTER.

[Cheerfully.] Thank you, Miss Roberts, but I've just remembered he isn't coming by train at all; he's coming in a motor car.

MR. BAXTER.

All the way from London?

MRS. BAXTER.

Yes, at least I think so. It's all in his letter—who knows what I did with Tom's letter?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Making a slight movement as if to go.] Shall I go and look?

MRS. BAXTER.

Hush. I'm trying to think where I put it. [Staring in front of her.] I had it in my hand before tea. I remember dropping it—I had it again after tea; I remember thinking it was another letter, but it wasn't. That's how I know. [Then to the others.] I'm surprised neither of you remembers where I put it.

MISS ROBERTS.

I'd better go and look. [She moves to go.]

MR. BAXTER.

I think I hear a motor coming.

[He goes and looks through the window.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[In an injured tone.] It's too late now, Miss Roberts. Mr. Baxter thinks he hears a motor coming.

MR. BAXTER.

Yes, it is a car ; I see the lamps. It must be Tom.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling affectionately.] Dear Tom, how nice it will be to see him again. [To MR. BAXTER.] Aren't you going to the hall to meet Tom ?

MR. BAXTER.

Yes, of course. [He goes out.]

MRS. BAXTER.

You've never seen my brother Tom.

MISS ROBERTS.

No, I don't think he's been home since I came to you.

MRS. BAXTER.

No, I was trying to count up this afternoon how many years it would be since Tom was home. I've forgotten again now, but I know I did it ; you'd have been surprised.

TOM.

[Outside.] Where is she?

[Confused greetings between TOM and MR. BAXTER are heard. MRS. BAXTER rises smiling, and goes towards the stairs.

MRS. BAXTER.

That's Tom's voice.

[TOM KEMP enters followed by MR. BAXTER. TOM is a cheerful, genial, high-spirited man about forty-five; he comes down-stairs, where MRS. BAXTER meets him. He takes her in both arms and kisses her on each cheek.

TOM.

Well, child, how are you—bless you.

MRS. BAXTER.

Oh, Tom, it is nice to see you again.

TOM.

[Holding her off and looking at her.] You look just the same.

MRS. BAXTER.

So do you, Tom. I'm so glad you haven't grown fat.

TOM.

[Laughing.] No chance to grow fat out there. Life is too strenuous. [He turns to MR. BAXTER and gives him a slap on the back.] Well, Dick, you old duffer.

MRS. BAXTER.

Tom.

TOM.

[Turning to her.] Yes?

MRS. BAXTER.

I want to introduce you to Miss Roberts.

[TOM gives MISS ROBERTS a friendly hand-shake.]

TOM.

How d'you do, Miss Roberts?

MRS. BAXTER.

Are you very tired, Tom?

TOM.

Tired—no—never tired. [Smiling at MRS. BAXTER.] You look splendid.

[He holds her by her shoulders.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[Languidly.] I'm pretty well.

TOM.

[Spinning MRS. BAXTER round.] Never better.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Disliking such treatment.] I'm pretty well.
[She wriggles her shoulders and edges away.]

MR. BAXTER.

[To TOM.] Have you dined ?

TOM.

Magnificently. Soup — fish — chops — roast beef — [To MISS ROBERTS.] You must live in Colorado, Miss Roberts, if you want to relish roast beef.

MR. BAXTER.

But you've driven from London since dinner.
[To MRS. BAXTER.] I suppose we can raise him a supper ?

MRS. BAXTER.

If the things aren't all put away.

TOM.

[Turning from MISS ROBERTS.] No—see here—hold on—I dined at the Inn.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling graciously.] Oh, I was just going to offer to go into the kitchen and cook you something myself. [She sits.]

TOM.

I was late getting in and I wasn't sure what time you dined. [To MR. BAXTER.] Now, Dick, tell me the family history.

MR. BAXTER.

[Scratching his head, says slowly.] The family history?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Calling out suddenly.] His! Ablative—his.

TOM.

Eh?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Gravely to TOM.] Hic—haec—hoc. His—his—his.

TOM.

[Looking blankly at MISS ROBERTS and MR. BAXTER.] What's the matter?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling as she explains.] I was giving them a Latin lesson before you came.

TOM.

[Amused.] You?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Conceitedly.] I never think we were meant to spend all our time in frivolous conversation.

TOM.

[Amused, turning to MR. BAXTER.] Dulcie, giving you a Latin lesson?

MR. BAXTER.

[Sadly.] I suppose she really thinks she was by now.

TOM.

[Walking about.] It's bully to be home again. I felt like a kid coming here—slipping along in the dark—with English trees and English hedges and English farms flitting by. No one awake but a few English cows, standing in the fields—up to their knees in mist. It looked like dreams—like that dream I sometimes have out there in Colorado. I dream I've just arrived in England—with no baggage and nothing on but my pyjamas.

MRS. BAXTER.

What is he talking about?

MISS ROBERTS.

I know what you mean!

TOM.

I guess you've had that dream yourself. No, I mean you know how I must have felt.

MISS ROBERTS.

Like a ghost revisiting its old haunts.

TOM.

[Sitting near MISS ROBERTS.] Like the ghost of the boy I used to be. I thought you'd understand. You look as if you would.

MRS. BAXTER.

I'm so glad you haven't married some nasty common person in America.

TOM.

[Chaffingly to her.] I thought you would be. That's why I didn't do it.

[He talks to MISS ROBERTS.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[Laughing as she turns to say to MR. BAXTER.] He's always so full of fun.

MISS ROBERTS.

I once dreamed I was in Colorado—but it was only from one of those picture post-cards you sent. I have never travelled.

TOM.

And how did Colorado look in your dreams?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Recalling her vision of Colorado.] Forests——

TOM.

That's right. Pine forests stretching away, away—down below there in the valley—a sea of tree-tops waving—waving—waving for miles.

MISS ROBERTS.

And mountains.

TOM.

Chains of mountains—great blue mountains streaked with snow—range beyond range. Oh! it's grand! it's great!

MISS ROBERTS.

I should love to see it.

MRS. BAXTER.

I think you are much better off where you are, Miss Roberts.

TOM.

It's great, but it's not gentle like this. It doesn't make you want to cry. It only makes you want to say your prayers.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Laughing as she turns to MR. BAXTER.]
Isn't he droll?

MISS ROBERTS.

I know what you mean.

TOM.

You know. I thought you'd know. Here it comes so close to you ; it's so cozy and personal. They've nothing like our orchards and lawns out there. [Rising suddenly.] I want to smell the garden. [He goes to the window.]

MR. BAXTER.

No ! Tom, Tom !

MRS. BAXTER.

Don't open the window ; we shall all catch cold.

TOM.

[Laughing, as he comes towards MRS. BAXTER.] Dear old Dulcie, same as ever.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling.] All of us are not accustomed to living in tents and huts and such places.

TOM.

What are you going to do with me in the morning ?

MRS. BAXTER.

We might all take a little walk, if it's a nice day.

TOM.

A little walk !

MRS. BAXTER.

If we're not too tired after the excitement of your arrival.

TOM.

What time's breakfast?

MR. BAXTER.

Quarter to nine.

MRS. BAXTER.

We drift down about half-past.

TOM.

What! You've got an English garden, and it's summer time and you aren't all running about outside at six o'clock in the morning?

MISS ROBERTS.

I am.

TOM.

You are? Yes, I thought you would be. You and I must have a walk before breakfast to-morrow morning.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Smiling.] Very well.

MRS. BAXTER.

Don't overdo yourself, Miss Roberts, before you begin the duties of the day. [To TOM.] Miss Roberts is the children's governess.

TOM.

Oh? [To MISS ROBERTS.] Do you rap them over the knuckles? And stick them in the corner?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Answering him in the same spirit of railery.] Oh, yes—pinch them and slap them and box their ears.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Leaning forward in her chair, thinking this may be true.] I hope you don't do anything of the sort, Miss Roberts.

MISS ROBERTS.

Oh, no! not really, Mrs. Baxter. [She rises.] I think I'll say good-night.

TOM.

Don't go to bed yet, Miss Roberts.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Yawning.] It's about time we all went.

TOM.

[To MRS. BAXTER.] You, too?

MRS. BAXTER.

What time is it?

TOM.

[Looking at his watch.] Twenty minutes past ten.

MRS. BAXTER.

How late.

TOM.

Call that late ?

MRS. BAXTER.

Ten is our bedtime. [She rises.] Come along, Miss Roberts ; we shan't be fit for anything in the morning if we don't bustle off to bed.
[She suppresses a yawn.]

MISS ROBERTS.

Good-night, Mr. Baxter.

[She shakes hands with him.]

MR. BAXTER.

Good-night.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Shaking hands with TOM.] Good-night.

TOM.

Good-night, Miss Roberts ; sleep well.

MISS ROBERTS.

I always do.

MRS. BAXTER.

Will you give me the magazine off the table, Miss Roberts, to take up-stairs? [TOM goes to the table and hands the magazine to MISS ROBERTS, who brings it to MRS. BAXTER. To MISS ROBERTS.] You and I needn't say good-night. We shall meet on the landing.

[Turns over the pages of the magazine.

MISS ROBERTS.

Good-night, everybody.

TOM.

[Following MISS ROBERTS to the foot of the stairs.] Good-night, Miss Roberts. [MISS ROBERTS goes out.] Nice girl, Miss Roberts.

MRS. BAXTER.

She suits me very well.

MR. BAXTER.

She says she is going to leave.

TOM.

Leave—Miss Roberts mustn't leave!

MRS. BAXTER.

I don't think she meant it. Don't sit up too late, Tom, and don't hurry down in the morning. Would you like your breakfast in bed?

TOM.

[Laughing.] In bed ?

MRS. BAXTER.

I thought you'd be so worn out after your journey.

TOM.

Heavens, no, that's nothing. Good-night, little sister. [He kisses her.]

MRS. BAXTER.

Good-night, Tom. It's so nice to see you again. [Then to MR. BAXTER.] Try not to disturb me when you come up-stairs. [Speaking through a yawn as she goes towards the door.] Oh, dear, I'm so sleepy. [She goes out.]

MR. BAXTER.

[Smiling at TOM.] Well, Tom !

TOM.

[Smiling at MR. BAXTER.] Well, Dick, how's everything ? Business pretty good ?

MR. BAXTER.

So so.

TOM.

That's nice.

MR. BAXTER.

I don't go into the city every day now, two or three times a week. I leave my partners to attend to things the rest of the time—they seem to get on just as well without me.

TOM.

I dare say they would. [Taking out his cigarette case.] I suppose I may smoke?

MR. BAXTER.

[Doubtfully.] Here?

TOM.

Well, don't you smoke here?

MR. BAXTER.

You may. She won't smell it in the morning. [TOM laughs and takes out a cigarette.] Tom, if ever you get married don't give in to your wife's weaknesses in the first few days of the honeymoon—you'll want to then, but don't. It becomes a habit. What's the use of saying that to you? I suppose you'll never marry now. [He sits down.]

TOM.

[Quite annoyed.] Why not? Why shouldn't I marry? I don't see why you think I shan't marry. How long has she been here?

[He lights a cigarette.]

MR. BAXTER.

Who ?

TOM.

Miss Roberts.

MR. BAXTER.

Oh !

TOM.

Weren't we talking of Miss Roberts ?

MR. BAXTER.

No.

TOM.

Oh, well, we are now.

MR. BAXTER.

She's been here about four years. I'm so sorry she wants to leave. I don't want her to go at all.

TOM.

Nor do I. Rather nice for you, Dick. A pretty wife and a pretty governess.

[He nudges him.]

MR. BAXTER.

Tom, don't do that.

[He defends himself by putting up his hands.]

TOM.

Very well, I won't.

MR. BAXTER.

[Embarrassed and slightly annoyed.] Why do you say that?

TOM.

Only chaffing. [He sees the chess-board.] Who's been playing chess?

MR. BAXTER.

Miss Roberts and I.

TOM.

Does Miss Roberts play chess? I must get her to teach me—let me see if I can remember any of the moves. [He sits by the table and moves the chess men about idly as he talks.] She is far too good to be your governess.

MR. BAXTER.

[Enthusing.] You've noticed what an unusual woman she is?

TOM.

Charming!

MR. BAXTER.

Isn't she?

TOM.

And so pretty!

MR. BAXTER.

Very pretty.

TOM.

She'll make a good wife for some man.

MR. BAXTER.

[Reluctantly.] I suppose so—some time.

TOM.

I should make love to her if I lived in the same house.

MR. BAXTER.

But if you were married?

TOM.

I'm not!

MR. BAXTER.

[Slowly and thoughtfully.] No.

[There is a moment's pause.]

TOM.

Let's change the subject, and talk about Miss Roberts. Tell me things about her.

MR. BAXTER.

She's an orphan.

TOM.

Poor girl.

MR. BAXTER.

She's no near relations.

TOM.

Lucky fellow.

MR. BAXTER.

She's wonderful with the children.

TOM.

Make a good mother.

MR. BAXTER.

And so nice, so interesting, so good, such a companion. I can't find a single fault in her. She's a woman in a thousand, in a million.

TOM.

I say, you'd better not let Dulcie hear you talk like that.

MR. BAXTER.

[Seriously.] I don't. [Tom laughs.] I was only saying that to show you how well she suits us.

TOM.

Of course.

MR. BAXTER.

How well she suits Dulcie.

TOM.

Oh, Dulcie, of course.

MR. BAXTER.

I can't think what Dulcie will do without her; she's got so used to her. Miss Roberts waits on Dulcie hand and foot.

TOM.

[Indignantly]. What a shame!

MR. BAXTER.

Isn't it?

TOM.

Why should Dulcie be waited on hand and foot?

MR. BAXTER.

I don't know. She's so—well, not exactly ill.

TOM.

I'll? She's as strong as a horse, always was.

MR. BAXTER.

Yes, I can't remember when she had anything really the matter with her, but she always seems so tired—keeps wanting to lie down—she's not an invalid, she's a ——

TOM.

She's a mollusc.

MR. BAXTER.

What's that?

TOM.

Mollusca, subdivision of the animal kingdom.

MR. BAXTER.

I know that.

TOM.

I don't know if the Germans have remarked that many mammalia display characteristics commonly assigned to mollusca. I suppose the scientific explanation is that a mollusc once married a mammal and their descendants are the human mollusc.

MR. BAXTER.

[Much puzzled.] What are you talking about?

TOM.

People who are like a mollusc of the sea, which clings to a rock and lets the tide flow over its head. People who spend all their energy and ingenuity in sticking instead of moving, in whom the instinct for what I call molluscery is as dominating as an inborn vice. And it is so catching. Why, one mollusc will infect a whole household. We all had it at home. Mother was quite a famous mollusc in her time.

She was bedridden for fifteen years, and then, don't you remember, got up to Dulcie's wedding, to the amazement of everybody, and tripped down the aisle as lively as a kitten, and then went to bed again till she heard of something else she wanted to go to—a garden party or something. Father, he was a mollusc, too; he called it being a conservative; he might just as well have stayed in bed, too. Ada, Charlie, Emmeline, all of them were more or less mollusky, but Dulcibella was the queen. You won't often see such a fine healthy specimen of a mollusc as Dulcie. I'm a born mollusc!

MR. BAXTER.

[Surprised.] You?

TOM.

Yes, I'm energetic now, but only artificially energetic. I have to be on to myself all the time; make myself do things. That's why I chose the vigorous West, and wander from camp to camp. I made a pile in Leadville. I gambled it all away. I made another in Cripple Creek. I gave it away to the poor. If I made another, I should chuck it away. Don't you see why? Give me a competence, nothing to work for, nothing to worry about from day to day—why I should become as famous a mollusc as dear old mother was.

MR. BAXTER.

Is molluscry the same as laziness?

TOM.

No, not altogether. The lazy flow with the tide. The mollusc uses forces to resist pressure. It's amazing the amount of force a mollusc will use, to do nothing, when it would be so much easier to do something. It's no fool, you know, it's often the most artful creature, it wriggles and squirms, and even fights from the instinct not to advance. There are wonderful things about molluscry, things to make you shout with laughter, but it's sad enough, too—it can ruin a life so, not only the life of the mollusc, but all the lives in the house where it dwells.

MR. BAXTER.

Is there no cure for molluscry?

TOM.

Well, I should say once a mollusc always a mollusc. But it's like drink, or any other vice. If grappled with it can be kept under. If left to itself, it becomes incurable.

MR. BAXTER.

Is Dulcie a very advanced case?

TOM.

Oh, very !!!

MR. BAXTER.

Oh!

TOM.

But let us hope not incurable. You know better than I how far she has gone. Tell me.

MR. BAXTER.

[Seriously.] She's certainly getting worse. For instance, I can remember the time when she would go to church twice a Sunday, walk there and back; now she drives once, and she keeps an extra cushion in the pew, sits down for the hymns and makes the girls find her places.

TOM.

Do you ever tell her not to mollusc so much?

MR. BAXTER.

I used to, but I've given up now.

TOM.

Oh, you must never give up.

MR. BAXTER.

The trouble is she thinks she's so very active.

TOM.

Molluscs always think that.

MR. BAXTER.

Dulcie thinks of something to be done and tells me to do it, and then, by some mental process, which I don't pretend to grasp, she thinks she's done it herself. D'you think she does that to humbug me?

TOM.

I believe there's no dividing line between the conscious and subconscious thoughts of molluscs. She probably humbugs herself just as much as she humbugs you.

MR. BAXTER.

Oh!

TOM.

You must be firm with her. The next time she tells you to do a thing tell her to do it herself.

MR. BAXTER.

I tried that. The other day, for instance, she wanted me to set a mouse-trap in her dressing-room; well, I was very busy at the time, and I knew there were no mice there, so I refused. It meant getting the cheese and everything.

TOM.

[Trying not to appear amused.] Of course. And what did she say when you refused to set the mouse-trap?

MR. BAXTER.

She began to make me sorry for her ; she has no end of ways of making me sorry for her, and I've a very tender heart ; but that day I just didn't care. I had the devil in me, so I said—set it yourself.

TOM.

Bravo.

MR. BAXTER.

We got quite unpleasant over it.

TOM.

And which of you set the mouse-trap in the end ?

MR. BAXTER.

Miss Roberts. [TOM rises and moves away to hide his amusement from MR. BAXTER.] It's always like that. She makes Miss Roberts do everything. For instance, Dulcie used to play chess with me of an evening, now she tells Miss Roberts to. She used to go walks with me, now she sends Miss Roberts. Dulcie was never energetic, but we used to have some good times together ; now I can't get her to go anywhere or do anything.

TOM.

Not very amusing for you.

MR. BAXTER.

It does rather take the fun out of everything.

TOM.

How did you come to let her get so bad ?

MR. BAXTER.

[Simply.] I fell in love with her. That put me at her mercy.

[There is a moment's silence, then TOM says with decision.

TOM.

I must take her in hand.

MR. BAXTER.

I wish you would.

TOM.

I'll make her dance.

MR. BAXTER.

Don't be hard on her.

TOM.

No, but firm. I'll show her what firmness is. A brother is the best person in the world to undertake the education of a mollusc. His firmness will be tempered with affection, and his affection won't be undermined with sentimentality. I shall start in on Dulcie the first thing to-morrow morning.

MR. BAXTER.

And now what do you say to getting our candles?

TOM.

[Following MR. BAXTER towards the stairs.] Come along. I'm ready—must have a good night's rest if I'm to tackle Dulcie in the morning. I don't anticipate any trouble. A woman isn't difficult to deal with if you take her the right way. Leave her to me, old man. You just leave her to me!

[They go up the stairs as the curtain falls.]

THE SECOND ACT

SCENE.—The same scene on the following morning. The French windows are wide open, displaying a view of the garden bathed in sunshine.

MRS. BAXTER is lounging in an armchair reading a novel. TOM enters with an enormous bunch of wild flowers, foxgloves, meadow-sweet, etc.

TOM.

Look!

MRS. BAXTER.

Oh, how pretty! We must put them in water. Where's Miss Roberts?

TOM.

In the schoolroom. They are at their lessons.

MRS. BAXTER.

Then we must wait. What a pity. I hope they won't die.

TOM.

Is Miss Roberts the only person in this house who can put these flowers in water?

MRS. BAXTER.

The servants are always busy in the morning.

TOM.

Why can't you do it?

MRS. BAXTER.

I have other things to do.

TOM.

What?

MRS. BAXTER.

Numerous things. Do you think a woman never has anything to do?

TOM.

[Coming to her and tapping her on the shoulder.] Get up and do them yourself.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Amiably.] While you sit still in this chair. All very fine!

TOM.

I'll help you.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Rising lazily.] Very well. Bring me the vases and some water. [She smells the flowers.]

TOM.

Vases. [Pointing to two vases on the mantel-piece.] Will these do?

MRS. BAXTER.

Yes. Get those.

TOM.

[Pointing to another vase on the table.] And that. You must get that one. We will divide the labour. [He gets the two vases. MRS. BAXTER has not stirred.] Where's yours?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling pleasantly.] I thought you were going to get the vases.

TOM.

We were going to do this work between us. Get your vase.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Laughing.] Oh, Tom—what a boy you are still.

TOM.

Why should I get all the vases? [Talking seriously to her.] You know, Dulcie, you'd feel better if you ran about a little more.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Pleasantly.] You'd save time, dear, if you'd run and get that vase yourself instead of standing there telling me to.

[TOM puts the vases on the table. Then he goes and takes up the other vase.]

TOM.

Oh, very well. It's not worth quarreling about.

MRS. BAXTER.

No, don't let us quarrel the first morning you are home.

TOM.

[Bringing the vase and putting it before her.]
There !

MRS. BAXTER.

Thank you, Tom. You'll find a tap in the wall outside the window and a little watering-can beside it.

TOM.

I got the vases.

MRS. BAXTER.

Please bring me the water, Tom. These poppies are beginning to droop already.

TOM.

I won't get the water. You must get it yourself.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling.] Very well. Wait till I go upstairs and put on my hat.

TOM.

To go just outside the window?

MRS. BAXTER.

I can't go into the hot sun without a hat.

TOM.

Rats!

MRS. BAXTER.

[Seriously.] It's not rats. Dr. Ross said I must never go out in the sun without a hat.

TOM.

That much won't hurt you.

MRS. BAXTER.

I don't mind, of course. But you must take the consequences if I have a sunstroke. Dick will be furious when he hears I've been out in the sun without a hat. You wouldn't like me to make Dick furious, would you, Tom? [Tom touches her and points to the window, then folds his arms. There is a slight pause while she waits for Tom to offer to go.] If you think it's too much trouble to step outside the window I'll go all the way up-stairs for my hat. I suppose all these pretty flowers will be quite dead by the time I come back.

TOM.

[Exasperated.] Oh, very well, I'll get the water.
[He goes out into the garden.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[Calling.] Try not to scratch the can, and be sure you don't leave the tap to dribble.

TOM.

[Outside.] Oh, the tap's all right.
[She occupies herself by smelling the flowers. TOM re-enters almost immediately with a little watering-can.]

TOM.

Here's the water.

MRS. BAXTER.

Thank you, Tom. Work seems like play when we do it between us. Fill the vases.

TOM.

I won't. [He puts the can on the table.]

MRS. BAXTER.

Well, wait while I go and get an apron.

TOM.

You don't want an apron for that.

MRS. BAXTER.

I'm not going to risk spilling the water all down this dress; I only put it on so as to look nice for you. I won't be a minute.

TOM.

Stay where you are. [Muttering to himself as he fills the vases.] An apron to fill three vases. You might as well put on your boots, or get an umbrella or a waterproof.

[He is about to set the can on the floor.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[Quickly.] Don't put it on the carpet. Put it on the gravel outside.

TOM.

Put it on the gravel yourself.

[TOM holds the can for her to take. She elaborately begins to wind a handkerchief round her right hand.]

MRS. BAXTER.

It's no use both of us wetting our hands.

[TOM grumbling goes to the window and pitches the can outside.]

TOM.

Now I hope I've scratched the can, and I'm sorry I didn't leave the tap to dribble.

MRS. BAXTER.

Naughty, naughty. Do you remember, Tom, when we were all at home together, you always did the flowers?

TOM.

I'm not going to do them now.

MRS. BAXTER.

You did them so tastefully. No one could do flowers like you. I remember Aunt Lizzie calling one day and saying if we hired a florist to arrange our flowers, we couldn't have got prettier effects than you got.

TOM.

Get on with those flowers.

MRS. BAXTER.

When I did the flowers, Mamma used to say the drawing-room used to look like a rubbish heap.

TOM.

[Loudly.] Get on with those flowers.

MRS. BAXTER.

I should so like Miss Roberts to see the way you can arrange flowers.

TOM.

Get on —

MRS. BAXTER.

[Wheedling him.] Do arrange one vase—only one, just to show Miss Roberts.

TOM.

[Weakening.] Well, only one. You must do the other two.

[He begins to put the flowers in water.

MRS. BAXTER watches him a moment, then she sinks into the handiest arm-chair.

MRS. BAXTER.

[After a slight pause.] How well you do it.

TOM.

[Suddenly realizing the situation.] No, no, I won't. [He flings the flowers on the table.] Oh, you are artful. You've done nothing; I've done everything; I got the flowers, the vases, the water—everything, and now not another stalk will I touch. I don't care if they die; their blood will be on your head, not mine.

[He sits down and folds his arms. A pause.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Serenely.] If you won't talk, I may as well go on reading my novel. It's on the table beside you. Would you mind passing it?

TOM.

Yes, I would.

MRS. BAXTER.

Throw it.

TOM.

I shan't.

MRS. BAXTER.

I thought you'd cheer us up when you came home, but you just sit in my chair doing nothing.

TOM.

[Turning on her and saying gravely.] Dulcie, it grieves me very much to see you such a Mollusc.

MRS. BAXTER.

What's a Mollusc?

TOM.

You are.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Puzzled.] A Mollusc? [Gaily.] Oh, I know, one of those pretty little creatures that live in the sea—or am I thinking of a sea anemone?

TOM.

It's dreadful to see a strong healthy woman so idle.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Genuinely amazed.] I idle? Oh, you're joking.

TOM.

What are you doing but idling now? [Approaching her and saying roughly.] Get up, and do those flowers. Get out of that chair this minute.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Rising and smiling.] I was only waiting for you. I thought we were going to do the flowers together.

TOM.

No, we won't do them together; if we do them together I shall be doing them by myself before I know where I am. [He sits again.]

MRS. BAXTER.

I don't call that fair, to promise to help me with the flowers, and then just to sit and watch. I don't think Colorado is improving you. You've become so lazy and underhand.

TOM.

[Indignantly.] What do you mean?

MRS. BAXTER.

What I mean to say is, you undertook to help me with the flowers, and now you try to back out of it. Perhaps you call that sharp in America, but in England we should call it un-sportsmanlike.

TOM.

[Picking up the flowers and throwing them down disgustedly.] Oh, why did I ever go and gather all this rubbish?

[MR. BAXTER enters and comes down the stairs.

MR. BAXTER.

Half-past eleven, dear.

MRS. BAXTER.

Thank you, dear.

TOM.

Half-past eleven, dear—thank you, dear—what does that mean?

MR. BAXTER.

Lunch.

TOM.

Already?

MR. BAXTER.

Not real lunch.

MRS. BAXTER.

We always have cake and milk in the dining-room at half-past eleven. We think it breaks up the morning more. Aren't you coming?

TOM.

Cake and milk at half-past eleven; what an idea! No, thank you.

MRS. BAXTER.

I shall be glad of the chance to sit down. I've had a most exhausting morning.

[She goes out.]

MR. BAXTER.

Have you been taking her in hand?

TOM.

[Pretending not to comprehend.] I beg your pardon?

MR. BAXTER.

You said you were going to take her in hand, first thing this morning.

TOM.

Oh, yes, so I did. So I have done—in a way—not seriously, of course—not the first morning.

MR. BAXTER.

You said you were going to show her what firmness was.

TOM.

Well, so I did, but never having had any firmness from you, she doesn't know it when she sees it. [MR. BAXTER is about to put some of the flowers in a vase.] What are you doing?

MR. BAXTER.

They're dying for want of water.

TOM.

But I said she must put them in water herself.

MR. BAXTER.

Oh, I see, discipline.

TOM.

Exactly.

MR. BAXTER.

What happened?

TOM.

[Pointing to the flowers.] Can't you see what's happened? There they are still. [Angrily.] We've spent hours wrangling over those damned flowers. It may seem paltry to make such a fuss over anything so trivial, but it's the principle of the thing; if I give in at the start, I shall have to give in to the finish.

MR. BAXTER.

Like me.

TOM.

Yes, like you. When she comes back from the dining-room, I'll make her do those flowers herself, if I have to stand over her all the morning.

MR. BAXTER.

[Looking at TOM with admiration.] That's the spirit. If only I had begun like that the very first morning of our honeymoon.

TOM.

[With great determination.] I'll stand no nonsense. She shall do the flowers herself.

[MISS ROBERTS enters.

MISS ROBERTS.

Mrs. Baxter sent me to do the flowers.

[She comes immediately to the table and begins putting the flowers in water. TOM and MR. BAXTER look at each other.

TOM.

[To him.] Shall I tell her not to?

MR. BAXTER.

Then Dulcie will tell her she is to.

TOM.

Then we shall have to humiliate Dulcie before Miss Roberts.

MR. BAXTER.

Yes.

TOM.

I don't want to do that.

MR. BAXTER.

No.

TOM.

I'm not giving in.

MR. BAXTER.

No.

TOM.

Don't gloat.

MR. BAXTER.

I'm not gloating.

TOM.

You are. You're gloating because I've had to give in the way you always do.

MISS ROBERTS.

[To MR. BAXTER.] The girls have been asking if I thought they could have a half-holiday in honour of their uncle's arrival.

MR. BAXTER.

I don't see why not.

MISS ROBERTS.

If you think they'd be in the way, I might take them off to the woods for the day.

MR. BAXTER.

Yes.

MISS ROBERTS.

I thought as it's so fine we might take our lunch with us, and have a picnic.

TOM.

Why don't we all go a picnic?

MR. BAXTER.

All who?

TOM.

You and I and the girls and Miss Roberts and Dulcie.

MR. BAXTER.

You'll never get Dulcie on a picnic, will he, Miss Roberts?

TOM.

Why not ?

MR. BAXTER.

Too much exertion.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Still busy filling the vases.] I think Mrs. Baxter would go if Mr. Kemp asked her.

[TOM looks at MR. BAXTER as soon as MISS ROBERTS has spoken and MR. BAXTER looks dubious.]

TOM.

[In a lower voice, to MR. BAXTER.] I don't want Miss Roberts to think that I can't master Dulcie; besides, a picnic, the very thing to make her run about, but we must approach her tactfully and keep our tempers. I lost mine over the flowers, otherwise I've not the least doubt I could have made her do them; we must humour Dulcie and cajole her. Whisk her off to the woods in a whirl of gaiety; you go dancing into the dining-room like this. [Assuming great jollity.] We're all going off on a picnic.

MR. BAXTER.

Oh, no.

TOM.

Why not ?

MR. BAXTER.

It wouldn't be me.

TOM.

Well, er—[glancing at MISS ROBERTS] go and—er—— [Glancing again at MISS ROBERTS.] Oh, go and say whatever you like. But be jolly about it; full of the devil.

[He takes MR. BAXTER by the arm and pushes him towards the stairs.]

MR. BAXTER.

[Imitating TOM as he goes.] We're all going off on a picnic. [He stops at the top of the stairs and says seriously.] It wouldn't be me.

[He exits.]

TOM.

So you're not one of the cake and milk brigade?

MISS ROBERTS.

No.

TOM.

I thought you wouldn't be.

MISS ROBERTS.

Aren't you going to join them?

TOM.

No, I don't want to eat cake in the middle of the morning. I'm like you. We seem to have a lot of habits in common.

MISS ROBERTS.

Do you think so ?

TOM.

Don't you ?

MISS ROBERTS.

I haven't thought.

[She takes a vase to the mantelpiece.

TOM watches her and follows with the other vase. MISS ROBERTS takes the vase from TOM and puts it on the mantelpiece.

TOM.

Didn't we have a nice walk together ?

MISS ROBERTS.

Yes; don't you love being out in the early morning ?

TOM.

I'm up with the sun at home out West. I live out-of-doors out there.

MISS ROBERTS.

How splendid!

TOM.

You're the kind of girl for Colorado.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Pleased.] Am I?

TOM.

Can you ride?

MISS ROBERTS.

Yes, but I don't get any opportunities now.

TOM.

Got a good nerve?

MISS ROBERTS.

I broke a colt once; he'd thrown three men, but he never threw me!

TOM.

[Smiling at her.] Well done!

MISS ROBERTS.

I didn't mean to boast, but I'd love to do it again.

TOM.

I should love to see you mounted on a mustang, flying through our country.

MISS ROBERTS.

With the tree tops waving down in the valley, and the great blue mountains you told us about, stretching away—away ——

TOM.

[Watching her with admiration.] You certainly ought to come to Colorado.

MISS ROBERTS.

Nothing so thrilling could happen to me.

[She returns to the table and picks up the remaining flowers.]

TOM.

[Following her.] Why? You've nothing to do but get on the boat and take the train from New York, and I'd meet you in Denver.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Laughing.] It's so nice to have some one here to make us laugh.

TOM.

[A little hurt.] Oh, I was being serious.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Seriously.] Do you really think Colorado would be a good place for a girl like me to go to? A governess!

TOM.

Yes, yes, a girl who has to earn her own living has a better time of it out there than here, more independence, more chance, more life.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Thoughtfully.] I do know an English lady in Colorado Springs, at least a great friend of mine does, and I'm sure I could get a letter to her.

TOM.

[Cheerfully.] You don't want any letters of introduction; you've got me.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Smiling.] Yes, but that is not quite the same thing.

TOM.

No, I suppose not; no, I see: well, can't you write to your friend and tell her to send that letter on at once?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Amused.] You talk as if it were all settled.

TOM.

I wish it were.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Not noticing that he is flirting with her, she says thoughtfully.] I wish I knew what to do about leaving here.

TOM.

You told me you had already given my sister notice.

MISS ROBERTS.

She won't take it.

TOM.

She can't make you stay if you want to go.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Smiling, but serious.] It's not as simple as that. After Mrs. Baxter has treated me so well, I should be making a poor return, if I left her before she found some one to take my place. On the other hand, my duty to the children is to leave them.

TOM.

A real old-fashioned conscience.

MISS ROBERTS.

One must think of the others.

TOM.

It seems to me you're always doing that.

MISS ROBERTS.

If you knew how I sometimes long to be free to do whatever I like just for one day. When I see other girls—girls who don't work for a living—enjoying themselves—it comes over me so dreadfully what I am missing. From the schoolroom window I can see the tennis club, and while I am giving Gladys and Margery their geography lesson, I hear them calling "Play! Fifteen love!" and see the ball flying and the girls in their white dresses, talking to such nice-looking young men.

TOM.

Um, yes. Don't you ever talk to any of those nice-looking young men?

MISS ROBERTS.

Of course not.

TOM.

How's that?

MISS ROBERTS.

Governesses never do. We only pass them by as we walk out with the children, or see the backs of their heads in church. Or if we are introduced, as I was to one at the Rectory one day—the occasion is so unusual we feel quite strained and nervous—and can't appear at our best. So that they don't want to pursue the acquaintance even if they could.

TOM.

You don't seem strained and nervous as you talk to me.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Innocently.] You don't seem like the others.
[She meets his eyes—smiles at him and says.]
I must go back to the schoolroom. [She rises.]

TOM.

[Rising and coming to MISS ROBERTS.]
Not yet. Don't go yet. I want you to stay here—talking to me. You are sure to hear my little nieces shrieking about in the garden when they have done their cake.

[MRS. BAXTER enters followed by MR. BAXTER.]

MRS. BAXTER.

Oh, I hurried back to finish the flowers, but I see you have done them. Thank you.

MISS ROBERTS.

You asked me to do them, Mrs. Baxter.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling.] Oh, no, Miss Roberts—I think you are mistaken. I only said they were there waiting to be done.

[She sits in an armchair and begins to read a novel.]

TOM.

[In an undertone to MR. BAXTER.] Have you told her about the picnic?

MR. BAXTER.

There was no suitable opportunity—so ——

TOM.

You're a coward! [He pushes past him. TOM then motions to MR. BAXTER to speak to MRS. BAXTER. He refuses. TOM assuming great cheerfulness, addresses MRS. BAXTER.] We are all going off on a picnic.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Pleasantly.] Oh.

TOM.

Yes. We four and the girls. [Whispering to MR. BAXTER.] Back me up.

MR. BAXTER.

[Rubbing his hands together, and trying to assume jollity.] Won't that be fun?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Brightly.] I think it would be great fun ——

TOM.

Ah.

MRS. BAXTER.

—Some day.

TOM.

Why not to-day?

MRS. BAXTER.

Why to-day?

TOM.

[At a loss for an answer, appeals to MR. BAXTER and MISS ROBERTS.] Why to-day?

MISS ROBERTS.

In honour of Mr. Kemp's arrival, and it's such a fine day—and ——

MRS. BAXTER.

You will find the girls in the schoolroom—
dear.

TOM.

[Very jolly.] Shall she go and get them ready?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Innocently.] What for?

TOM.

The picnic.

MRS. BAXTER.

I thought it had been decided not to go to-day.

MR. BAXTER.

[Losing his temper.] Oh, Dulcie—you know quite well——

TOM.

[Signing to MR. BAXTER to keep quiet.] Sh!
[Turning to MRS. BAXTER and pretending to make a meek, heartfelt appeal.] Please let us go to-day. It's in honour of my arrival. I shall be so hurt if I don't have a picnic in honour of my arrival.

MRS. BAXTER.

Suppose it rains.

TOM.

[At a loss for an answer, appealing to the others.] Suppose it rains?

MISS ROBERTS.

[At the window.] I can't see a single cloud.

MR. BAXTER.

The glass has gone up.

TOM.

It won't rain if we take plenty of umbrellas and mackintoshes and our goloshes.

MRS. BAXTER.

I think we are all too tired.

TOM.

[Scouting the idea.] Too tired!

[MR. BAXTER and TOM get together.]

MRS. BAXTER.

I suppose it is the excitement of Tom's arrival which is making us feel so next-dayish.

TOM.

Next-dayish!

MRS. BAXTER.

You especially. You were very irritable over the flowers. You ought to go and lie down.

[She takes up her novel and opens it as if she considered the argument over. MISS ROBERTS watches them anxiously. MR. BAXTER makes an emphatic gesture, expressing his strong feelings on the subject.]

TOM.

[Clutching his arm.] We must keep our tempers. We must keep our tempers.

MR. BAXTER.

Shall we poke fun at her?

TOM.

No, no, we'll try a little coaxing first. [He takes a chair, places it close beside MRS. BAXTER and sits. Smiling affectionately at MRS. BAXTER.] Dear Dulcie.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling affectionately at TOM and patting his knees.] Dear Tom.

TOM.

We shall have such a merry picnic.

MRS. BAXTER.

It would have been nice, wouldn't it?

TOM.

Under a canopy of green boughs with the sunbeams dropping patterns on the carpet of moss at our feet.

MRS. BAXTER.

Spiders dropping on our hats.

TOM.

Dear, interesting little creatures, and so industrious.

MRS. BAXTER.

Ants up our arms.

TOM.

[Laughing.] Lizards up our legs. Frogs in our food. Oh, we shall get back to Nature. [TOM and MRS. BAXTER both laugh heartily, both in the greatest good-humour. MR. BAXTER and MISS ROBERTS also laugh.] Then it's settled.

MRS. BAXTER.

Yes, dear—it's settled.

TOM.

[Thinking he has won.] Ah!

MRS. BAXTER.

We'll all stay quietly at home.

[She resumes the reading of her book.

TOM is in dismay.

MR. BAXTER.

The girls will be greatly disappointed.

TOM.

[With emotion.] Poor girls! A day in the woods. [With mock pathos.] Think what that means to those poor girls.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Rising and saying seriously to MISS ROBERTS.] Miss Roberts, you might go to the schoolroom and tell Gladys and Margery that Mamma says they may have a half-holiday and go for a picnic in the woods.

[TOM winks at MR. BAXTER. The three look at each other agreeably surprised.]

MISS ROBERTS.

[Moving towards the stairs.] Thank you. Thank you very much, Mrs. Baxter. I'll go and get them ready at once. [She goes out.]

TOM.

I knew we only had to appeal to her heart.

MR. BAXTER.

We shall want twelve hard-boiled eggs.

TOM.

And some ginger-beer.

MR. BAXTER.

A ham.

TOM.

A few prawns.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Looking out of the window to which she has strolled.] I am glad Miss Roberts and the girls have got such a fine day for their picnic.

[TOM and MR. BAXTER look at each other in dismay.]

MR. BAXTER.

[After a pause.] After leading us on to believe——

TOM.

[In great good humour.] Can't you see she's teasing us? [Going to MRS. BAXTER, he playfully pinches her ear.] Mischievous little puss!

MRS. BAXTER.

[Gravely to MR. BAXTER.] Dear, I should like to speak to you.

MR. BAXTER.

Shall we go to my room?

MRS. BAXTER.

I don't see why we need trouble to walk across the hall. [Glances at TOM.] We may get this room to ourselves by and by.

[She sits down.]

TOM.

[Cheerfully taking the hint.] All right—all right. I'll go and make preparations for the picnic. Don't keep us waiting, Dulcie. Prawns—hams—ginger-beer—— [He runs off.]

MR. BAXTER.

[Slightly peevish.] I wish you would enter more into the spirit of the picnic. It would do you good to go to a picnic.

MRS. BAXTER.

I don't like the way Tom is carrying on with Miss Roberts. Last evening they monopolized the conversation. This morning—a walk before breakfast. Just now—as soon as my back is turned—at it again. I don't like it—and it wouldn't do me any good at all to go to a picnic.

MR. BAXTER.

Tom seems so set on our going.

MRS. BAXTER.

Tom is set on making me go. Tom has taken upon himself to reform my character. He thinks I need stirring up.

MR. BAXTER.

[Embarrassed.] What put such an idea as that into your head?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Looking him straight in the eye.] The clumsy way you both go about it. [MR. BAXTER looks exceedingly uncomfortable.] . . . It wouldn't deceive any woman. It wouldn't suit me at all if Tom became interested in Miss Roberts. I could never find another Miss Roberts. She understands my ways so well, I couldn't possibly do without her; not that I'm thinking of myself; I'm thinking only of her good. It's not right for Tom to come here turning her head, and I don't suppose the climate of Colorado would suit her.

MR. BAXTER.

I don't think we need worry yet. They only met yesterday.

MRS. BAXTER.

That is so like you, dear—to sit still and let everything slip past you like the—what was that funny animal Tom mentioned—the mollusc. I prefer to take action. We must speak to Tom.

MR. BAXTER.

You'll only offend him if you say anything to him.

MRS. BAXTER.

I've no intention of saying anything. I think it would come much better from you.

MR. BAXTER.

[With determination.] I shan't interfere.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Trying to work on his feelings.] It's not often I ask you to do anything for me, and I'm not strong.

MR. BAXTER.

[Feeling uncomfortable.] I shouldn't know what to say to Tom, or how to say it.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Approaching MR. BAXTER.] You know the way men talk to each other. Go up to him and say, "I say, old fellow, that little governess of ours. Hands off, damn it all." [MRS. BAXTER nudges MR. BAXTER in a masculine way. MR. BAXTER laughs and retreats a little. MRS. BAXTER is mightily offended.] I don't consider that trifling with a young girl's affections is food for laughter.

MR. BAXTER.

[Trying to conceal his amusement.] I think I'll go and join Tom.

MRS. BAXTER.

Will you tell him we wish him to pay less [MISS ROBERTS enters] attention to ——
[She sees MISS ROBERTS.

MR. BAXTER.

We'll see.

[He goes out.]

MRS. BAXTER.

I know what that means.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Coming to MRS. BAXTER.] If you please, Mrs. Baxter, I'm having such trouble with Gladys and Margery. They want to go to the picnic in their Sunday hats, and I say they must go in their every-day ones.

MRS. BAXTER.

If there's going to be any trouble about the matter, let them have their own way.

MISS ROBERTS.

Thank you.

[She is going out.]

MRS. BAXTER.

Oh, Miss Roberts. [MISS ROBERTS stops.] I want a word with you before you start off on your picnic. Sit down, dear. [MISS ROBERTS sits down.] You know how devoted I am to my brother Tom.

MISS ROBERTS.

[With smiling enthusiasm.] I don't wonder. He's delightful. So amusing, so easy to get on with.

MRS. BAXTER.

Yes, but of course we all have our faults, and a man who gets on easily with one will get on easily with another. Always mistrust people who are easy to get on with.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Solemnly.] Oh—do you mean he isn't quite honest?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Indignantly.] Nothing of the sort. You mustn't twist my meanings in that manner. You might get me into great trouble.

MISS ROBERTS.

I'm so sorry, but I thought you were warning me against him.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Confused.] Yes—no—yes—and no. [Recovering herself.] I am sure you will take what I'm going to say as I mean it, because—[smiles at her] I am so fond of you. Ever since you came to us I have wished to make you one of the family. When I say one of the family, I mean in the sense of taking your meals with us. Mr. Baxter and the girls and I are so much attached to you. We should like to keep you with us always.

MISS ROBERTS.

I must leave at the end of the term.

MRS. BAXTER.

We won't go into all that now.

MISS ROBERTS.

But —

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling and raising her hand in protestation, says politely.] Try not to interrupt. [Seriously.] I should say that a man of Tom's age who has never married would be a confirmed bachelor. He might amuse himself here and there with a pretty girl, but he would never think of any woman seriously.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Embarrassed.] I can't think why you are saying this to me.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Plunging at last into her subject.] To speak quite frankly—as a sister—I find your attitude towards my brother Tom a trifle too encouraging. Last evening, for instance, you monopolized a good deal of the conversation—and this morning you took a walk with him before breakfast—and altogether—[very sweetly] it looks just a little bit as if you were trying to flirt—doesn't it?

MISS ROBERTS.

[With suppressed rage.] I'm not a flirt!

MRS. BAXTER.

I didn't say you were—I said ——

MISS ROBERTS.

I'm not a flirt—I'm not.

MRS. BAXTER.

We'll say no more about it. It was very hard for me to have to speak to you. You have no idea how difficult I found it.

MISS ROBERTS.

Mrs. Baxter, you have often been very kind to me, and I don't want to forget it—but I'd rather not be treated as one of the family any more. I want my meals in the schoolroom, and I mustn't be expected to sit in the drawing-room.

MRS. BAXTER.

Upsetting the whole machinery of the house.

MISS ROBERTS.

I can't go on meeting him at table and everywhere.

MRS. BAXTER.

I don't see why not.

MISS ROBERTS.

I shouldn't know where to look or what to say.

MRS. BAXTER.

Look out of the window and converse on inanimate objects.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Mumbles angrily.] I will not look out of the window and converse on inanimate objects.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Putting up a warning hand.] Hush, hush, hush!

MISS ROBERTS.

Please understand I won't be one of the family, and I won't go to the picnic.

[She goes hurriedly into the garden.]

MRS. BAXTER.

Oh, oh, naughty girl!

[TOM and MR. BAXTER enter.]

TOM.

Cook thinks the large basket and the small hamper will suffice. She said suffice.

MRS. BAXTER.

I'm very sorry, Tom, but it is out of the question for us to go to a picnic to-day.

MR. BAXTER.

Oh, Dulcie.

TOM.

Too late to back out.

MRS. BAXTER.

I haven't backed out. It's Miss Roberts.

TOM.

We can't have a picnic without Miss Roberts.

MR. BAXTER.

What's the matter with her?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Solemnly.] Miss Roberts and I have had words. [TOM whistles quietly.]

MR. BAXTER.

What about?

MRS. BAXTER.

Never you mind.

TOM.

Oh, it can't be such a very dreadful quarrel between two such nice sensible women. I guess you were both in the right. [To MR. BAXTER.] I guess they were both in the wrong. [Taking MRS. BAXTER by the arm and cajoling her.] Come along. Tell us all about it.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Withdrawing her arm.] No, Tom, I can't.

TOM.

Then suppose I go to Miss Roberts and get her version.

MRS. BAXTER.

[In dismay.] Oh, no, that wouldn't do at all.

TOM.

I only want to make peace. [To MR. BAXTER.] Wouldn't it be better if they told me and let me make it up for them?

MR. BAXTER.

Why you?

TOM.

A disinterested person.

MRS. BAXTER.

But you are not.

[Putting her hand over her mouth.]

TOM.

[Turns quickly to MRS. BAXTER.] What?

MRS. BAXTER.

I'm not going to say any more.

[She sits down.]

TOM.

[Seriously.] You must. If your quarrel concerns me, I have a right to know all about it.

MR. BAXTER.

[Motioning to MRS. BAXTER.] You are only putting ideas into their heads.

TOM.

[Turning sharply on MR. BAXTER.] Putting what ideas into their heads? [It dawns upon him what the subject of the quarrel has been.] Oh! [To MRS. BAXTER.] You don't mean to say you spoke to her about—— [He stops embarrassed.] What have you said to her?

MRS. BAXTER.

I decline to tell you.

TOM.

Then I shall ask her.

[Going.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[Quickly.] No, no, Tom. I—prefer to tell you myself. I spoke very nicely to her. I forget how the conversation arose, but I think I did say something to the effect that young girls ought to be careful not to have their heads turned by men years older than themselves.

[She looks significantly at TOM, who turns away angrily.] Instead of thanking me, she stamped and stormed and was very rude to me—very rude. I simply said [in a very gentle tone], Oh, Miss Roberts! [Rousing herself as she describes MISS ROBERTS' share in the scene.] But she went on shouting, "I won't go a picnic, I won't go a picnic!" and bounced out of the room. It just shows you how you can be deceived in people, and I have been so good to that girl.

TOM.

[Coming towards MRS. BAXTER.] I'm very angry—with you—very angry.

MRS. BAXTER.

I simply gave her a word of counsel which she chose to take in the wrong spirit.

TOM.

You interfered. You meddled. It's too bad of you, Dulcie. It's unbearable.

MR. BAXTER.

[Watching TOM.] The way you take it any one would think you had fallen in love with our Miss Roberts since yesterday.

MRS. BAXTER.

Yes—wouldn't any one?

TOM.

[Addressing them both.] Would there be anything so strange in that? Perhaps I have, I don't know—perhaps as you imply I'm old enough to know better. I don't know. All I know is, I think her the most charming girl I ever met. I've not had time to realize what this is; one must wait and see; give the seed a chance to produce a flower—not stamp on it. [To MRS. BAXTER.] You might have left things alone, when all was going so pleasantly. I was just beginning to think—beginning to feel—wondering if perhaps—later on—— Now you've spoilt everything.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Tearful and angry.] I won't stay here to be abused. [Going to the window.] You've done nothing else all the morning. I'm tired of being taken in hand and improved. No one likes to be improved.

[MRS. BAXTER goes out through the window.]

TOM.

I don't want to be unkind to her—but you know how a man feels. He doesn't like any one meddling when he's just beginning to ——

MR. BAXTER.

[Showing embarrassment all through the early part of this scene.] I agree with Dulcie. It would not be suitable for you to marry Miss Roberts.

TOM.

She's as good as any of us.

MR. BAXTER.

[Hesitatingly.] It's not that. Miss Roberts from her position here—alone in the world but for us—and having lived here so long—is—in a sense—under my protection.

TOM.

I don't see that, but go on.

MR. BAXTER.

I feel—in a certain degree—responsible for her. I think it is my duty—and Dulcie's duty—to try and stop her making what we both feel would be an unsuitable marriage.

TOM.

It's a little early to speak of our marriage, but why should it be unsuitable?

MR. BAXTER.

We don't wish her to marry you.

TOM.

Why? Give me a reason.

MR. BAXTER.

Why do you press me for a reason?

TOM.

Because this is very important to me. You have constituted yourself her guardian. I have no objection to that, but I want to get at your objection to me as a husband to her. I'm in a position to marry. I'd treat her well if she'd have me. We'd be as happy as the day is long in our little home in the mountains——

MR. BAXTER.

[Unable to restrain himself.] You married to her? Oh, no—oh, no, I couldn't bear that.

[He sinks into a chair and leans his head on his hands.]

TOM.

[Completely taken aback.] Dick, think what you're saying.

MR. BAXTER.

I couldn't help it. You made me say it—talking of taking her away—right away where I shall never see her again. I couldn't stand my life here without her.

TOM.

Dick, Dick!

MR. BAXTER.

She knows nothing of how I feel; it's only this moment I realized myself what she is to me.

TOM.

Then from this moment you ought never to see her again.

MR. BAXTER.

That's impossible!

TOM.

Think of Dulcie, and the girl herself; she can't live in the house with you both now.

MR. BAXTER.

She's lived with us for four years, and no one has ever seen any harm in it; nothing is changed.

TOM.

From the moment you realized what she is to you, everything is changed.

MR. BAXTER.

There has never been anything to criticize in my conduct to Miss Roberts, and there won't be anything.

TOM.

She is the object of an affection, which you, as a married man, have no right to feel for her. I don't blame you entirely. I blame Dulcie, for throwing you so much together. I remember all you said last evening. Dulcie used to play chess with you, now she tells Miss Roberts to ; Dulcie used to go for long walks with you, now she sends Miss Roberts. Out of your forced companionship has sprung this, which she ought to have foreseen.

MR. BAXTER.

Nothing is confessed or understood ; I don't see that Miss Roberts is in any danger.

TOM.

She is alone. She has no confidant, no friend, no outlet for the natural desires of youth, for love, for some one to love. She finds you sympathetic—you know the rest.

MR. BAXTER.

It is jealousy that is at the bottom of your morality.

TOM.

It won't do, Dick. It's a most awful state of things.

MR. BAXTER.

If you think that, I wonder you stay here.

TOM.

Very well, if you mean I ought to clear out.
[He goes towards the door.]

MR. BAXTER.

[Following after TOM.] No, Tom. Look here, I didn't mean that; but you see, you and I can't discuss this without losing our tempers, so if your visit to us is to continue mutually pleasant, as I hope it will, we'd better avoid the topic in future.

TOM.

Then you mean to keep Miss Roberts here indefinitely,—compromised?

MR. BAXTER.

It's no use going over the ground; we don't see things from the same point of view, so don't let us go on discussing. [He goes up the stairs and then turns to TOM.] Tom, you might trust me. [MR. BAXTER goes out.]

[TOM remains in deep thought, then suddenly makes a determined movement, then stops and sighs. MISS ROBERTS enters from the garden. She hesitates timidly when she sees him.]

MISS ROBERTS.

Mrs. Baxter sent me to get her magazine.

TOM.

Where is my sister?

MISS ROBERTS.

Sitting in the garden.

[She takes up the magazine and is going out again.]

TOM.

I—— [MISS ROBERTS stops.] I—want to tell you something.

MISS ROBERTS.

I can't stay.

TOM.

I ask you as a great favour to me to hear me.

MISS ROBERTS.

I ought not to stay.

TOM.

I didn't think you'd refuse me when I asked you like that.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Hesitating.] I can't stay long.

TOM.

Won't you sit down while I tell you? [He indicates a chair.] MISS ROBERTS comes to the chair and sits.] I want to tell you about myself, and my life in Colorado.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Nervously.] I don't think I can stay if it's just to talk and hear stories of Colorado.

TOM.

[Smiling.] Did you have enough of my stories this morning?

MISS ROBERTS.

Oh, no, I was quite interested in what you said, but I——

TOM.

You were interested. I knew it by your eyes. Why, you even thought you'd like to go there yourself some time.

MISS ROBERTS.

I've changed my mind. I've quite given up that idea now.

TOM.

You'd like it out there. I'm sure you would; it's a friendly country; no one cares who you are, but only what you are, so you soon make friends. That's right. That gives every one a chance, and it's good in this way, it makes a man depend on himself, it teaches him to think clearly and decide quickly; in fact he has to keep wide awake if he wants to succeed. That's the kind of training I've had. I've been from mining camp to mining camp—I've tried my luck in half the camps in California and Colorado. Sometimes it was good, sometimes bad, but take it altogether, I've done well. [Making the next point clearly and delicately.] I've got something saved up, and I can always make good money, anywhere west of Chicago. [Laughing.] Now I'm talking like a true American; they always begin by telling you how much they've got. You'll forgive me, won't you? It's force of habit. Now what was I saying? [Seriously.] We learn to decide quickly in everything; you find me somewhat abrupt; it's only that. I make up my mind all at once, and once it's made up, that's finished—I don't change. [Hesitating slightly.] The first time I saw you I made up my mind—I said that's the girl for me, that's the girl I want for my wife. [Leans towards her.] Will you be my wife?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Rising and very much moved and distressed.] Oh, no, I can't. I didn't know that was coming, or I wouldn't have listened, I wouldn't indeed.

TOM.

[Following her.] I've been too abrupt. I warned you I was like that; I make up my mind I want something, and the next thing is, I go straight away and ask for it. That's too quick for you. You want time to think—well, take time to think it over. [MISS ROBERTS turns to him quickly.] Don't tell me yet; there's no hurry. I'm not going back for a month or two.

MISS ROBERTS.

I'm very much obliged to you for asking me to marry you, but I can't.

TOM.

Never?

MISS ROBERTS.

No, never! I don't think so.

TOM.

Eh? That sounds like hope.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Quickly.] I didn't mean it to sound like hope.

TOM.

It didn't seem that way last evening when we were talking about the forests and the mountains, and I was telling you how it felt to be back—or this morning when we were getting flowers, or afterwards when we sat here, while they were eating their cake and milk; it seemed to me we were getting on famously.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Appealingly.] Oh, please don't go on. I can't bear it. You only distress me.

[She sobs.]

TOM.

Oh! [Pausing and looking at her, he sees that she means it and is really distressed.] I'm sorry.

[He goes out abruptly MISS ROBERTS is weeping bitterly. MR. BAXTER enters. He comes down-stairs towards her and looks down at her with affectionate concern. MISS ROBERTS does not notice his presence till he speaks.

MR. BAXTER.

What is it?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Trying to control her sobs.] Nothing.

MR. BAXTER.

You are in trouble. You are in great trouble—can't you tell me, —can't I do anything?

MISS ROBERTS.

No.

MR. BAXTER.

Wouldn't it do you good to tell somebody?
Don't you want some one to tell it all to?

MISS ROBERTS.

I want——

[She falters.]

MR. BAXTER.

What is it you want?

MISS ROBERTS.

I think I want a mother.

[The effort of saying this brings on her tears afresh; she stands weeping bitterly.]

MR. BAXTER puts his arm about her and draws her gently to him. She yields herself naturally and sobs on his shoulder. MR. BAXTER murmurs and soothes her.

MR. BAXTER.

Poor child! Poor child! [While they are in this sentimental position TOM and MRS. BAXTER appear at the window. They see MR. BAXTER and MISS ROBERTS but are unseen by them. MISS ROBERTS disengages herself from MR. BAXTER and goes out sobbing without perceiving TOM and MRS. BAXTER. MR. BAXTER] watches MISS ROBERTS off, then turns and sees MRS. BAXTER for the first time; he becomes very embarrassed under her steady disapproving eyes. To MRS. BAXTER.] Do you want me to explain?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Coldly.] Not at present, thank you, Richard.

MR. BAXTER.

I was only ——

MRS. BAXTER.

Not now. I prefer to consider my position carefully before expressing my astonishment and indignation.

MR. BAXTER.

Well, if you won't let me explain ——

[He turns to the window and sees TOM. He looks appealingly at him. TOM ignores him and walks past him. MR. BAXTER shrugs his shoulders and goes out through the window.]

MRS. BAXTER.

I don't know which of them I feel angriest with.

TOM.

Dick, of course.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Tearfully.] For thirteen years no man has ever kissed me,—except you,—and Dick,—and Uncle Joe,—and Dick's brothers,—and old Mr. Redmayne,—and the Dean when he came back from the Holy Land. [Working herself into a rage.] I'll never speak to Dick again. I'll bundle Miss Roberts out of the house at once.

TOM.

Do it discreetly. Send her away certainly but don't do anything hastily.

MRS. BAXTER.

I'm not the woman to put up with that sort of thing.

TOM.

[Persuasively.] Don't be hard on her; don't be turning her into the street; make it look as if she were going on a holiday. Pack her off somewhere with the children for a change of air, this afternoon.

MRS. BAXTER.

It's most inconvenient; everything will be upside down. [Calming herself, she sits in an armchair.] You're right. I mustn't be too hasty; better wait a few days, till the end of the term, or even till after we come home from the seaside, then pack her off. [Pause.] Unless it blows over.

TOM.

[Astonished and going to her quickly.] Blows over! It won't blow over while she's in the house. [Very seriously.] You're up against a serious crisis. Take warning from what you saw and save your home from ruin. [MRS. BAXTER, awed and impressed by this, listens attentively.] You've grown so dependent on Miss Roberts, you've almost let her slip into your place; if you want to keep Dick, you must begin an altogether different life, not to-morrow — [MRS. BAXTER shakes her head.] Not next week — [MRS. BAXTER shakes her head again.] Now! [MRS. BAXTER'S face betrays her discontent at the unattractive prospect he offers her.] You be his companion, you play chess with him, you go walks with him, sit up with him in the evenings, get up early in the morning. Be gay and cheerful at the breakfast table. When he goes away, see him off; when he comes home, run to meet him. Learn to do without Miss Roberts, and make him forget her.

MRS. BAXTER.

Very well. [Rising.] She shall leave this house directly,—directly I recover.

TOM.

Recover from what?

MRS. BAXTER.

From the shock. Think of the shock I've had ; there's sure to be a reaction. I shouldn't wonder if I had a complete collapse. It's beginning already. [She totters and goes towards staircase.] Oh, dear, I feel so ill. Please call Miss Roberts.

TOM.

You were going to learn to do without Miss Roberts.

MRS. BAXTER.

That was before I was ill. I can't be ill without Miss Roberts.

[Puts her hand to her side, turns up her eyes and groans as she totters out.]

TOM.

Oh! Oh! You Mollusc!

THE CURTAIN FALLS

THE THIRD ACT

SCENE.—The same scene one week later. The only difference to the appearance of the room is that there is the addition of an invalid couch with a little table beside it.

TOM is in an armchair reading a newspaper.
MISS ROBERTS comes in carrying two pillows, a scent bottle, and two fans. The pillows she lays on the couch.

MISS ROBERTS.

She is coming down to-day.

TOM.

[Betraying no interest at all.] Oh!

MISS ROBERTS.

Aren't you pleased?

TOM.

I think it's about time.

MISS ROBERTS.

How unsympathetic you are—when she has been so ill. For a whole week she has never left her room.

TOM.

And refuses to see a doctor.

MISS ROBERTS.

She says she doesn't think a doctor could do anything for her.

TOM.

Except make her get up. Oh, no! I forgot—it's their business to keep people in bed.

MISS ROBERTS.

You wouldn't talk like that if you'd seen her as I have, lying there day after day, so weak she can only read the lightest literature, and eat the most delicate food.

TOM.

She won't let me in her room.

MISS ROBERTS.

She won't have any one but Mr. Baxter and me.

TOM.

It's too monstrous. What actually happened that day?

MISS ROBERTS.

Which day?

TOM.

The day you turned me down. [MISS ROBERTS looks at him troubled. He looks away sadly.] What happened after that?

MISS ROBERTS.

I was still upset when Mr. Baxter came in and tried to comfort me.

TOM.

[Grimly.] I remember.

MISS ROBERTS.

You know he's a kind fatherly little man.

TOM.

Oh—fatherly!

MISS ROBERTS.

Yes, I wept on his shoulder just as if he'd been an old woman.

TOM.

Ah! An old woman! I don't mind that.

MISS ROBERTS.

Then I went to the schoolroom. Presently in walked Mrs. Baxter. She seemed upset too, for all of a sudden she flopped right over in the rocking-chair.

TOM.

The only comfortable chair in that room.

MISS ROBERTS.

Oh, don't say that. Then I called Mr. Baxter; when he came, she gripped his hand and besought him never to leave her. I was going to leave them alone together, when she gripped my hand and besought me never to leave her either.

TOM.

Did you promise?

MISS ROBERTS.

Of course. I thought she was dying.

TOM.

[Scouting the idea.] Dying? What made you think she was dying?

MISS ROBERTS.

She said she was dying.

TOM.

Well, what happened after she gripped you both in her death struggles?

MISS ROBERTS.

We got her to bed, where she has remained ever since.

TOM.

And here we are a week later, all four of us just where we were, only worse. What's to be done ?

MISS ROBERTS.

We must go on as we are for the present.

TOM.

Impossible !

MISS ROBERTS.

Till you go. Then Mr. Baxter and I —

TOM.

More impossible !

MISS ROBERTS.

[Innocently.] Poor Mr. Baxter ; he will miss you when you go ; I shall do my best to comfort him.

TOM.

That's most impossible.

MISS ROBERTS.

He must have some one to take care of him, while his wife is ill.

TOM.

You don't really think she has anything the matter with her ?

MISS ROBERTS.

I can't imagine any one who is not ill stopping in bed a week ; it must be so boring.

TOM.

To a mollusc there is no pleasure like lying in bed feeling strong enough to get up.

MISS ROBERTS.

But it paralyzes everything so. Mr. Baxter can't go to business ; I never have an hour to give to the girls ; they're running wild and forgetting the little I ever taught them. I can't believe she would cause so much trouble deliberately.

TOM.

Not deliberately, no. It suited Dulcie to be ill, so she kept on telling herself that she was ill till she thought she was, and if we don't look out, she will be. It's all your fault.

MISS ROBERTS.

Oh—how ?

TOM.

You make her so comfortable, she'll never recover till you leave her.

MISS ROBERTS.

I've promised never to leave her till she recovers.

TOM.

A death-bed promise isn't binding if the corpse doesn't die.

MISS ROBERTS.

I don't think you quite understand how strongly I feel my obligation to Mrs. Baxter. Four years ago I had almost nothing, and no home; she gave me a home; I can't desert her while she is helpless, and tells me twenty times a day how much she needs me.

TOM.

She takes advantage of your old-fashioned conscience.

MISS ROBERTS.

I wish she would have a doctor.

TOM.

[With determination.] She shall have me.

MISS ROBERTS.

But suppose you treat her for molluscry, and you find out she has a real illness—think how dreadful you would feel.

TOM.

That's what I've been thinking. That's why I've been sitting still doing nothing for a week. I do believe I'm turning into a mollusc again.

It's in the air. The house is permeated with molluscular microbes. I'll find out what is the matter with Dulcie to-day; if it's molluscry I'll treat her for it myself, and if she's ill she shall go to a hospital.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Going to the bottom of the stairs.] I think I hear her coming down-stairs. Yes, here she is. Don't be unkind to her.

TOM.

How is one to treat such a woman? I've tried kindness—I've tried roughness—I've tried keeping my temper—I've tried losing it—I've tried the serious tack—and the frivolous tack—there isn't anything else. [As MR. and MRS. BAXTER appear.] Oh! for heaven's sake look at this!

[He takes his paper and sits down, ignoring them both. MR. BAXTER is carrying MRS. BAXTER in his arms. MRS. BAXTER is charmingly dressed as an invalid, in a peignoir and cap with a bow. She appears to be in the best of health, but behaves languidly.

MRS. BAXTER.

[As MR. BAXTER carries her down the stairs.] Take care of the stairs, Dick. Thank you, darling! How kind you are to me. [Nods and smiles to MISS ROBERTS.] Dear Miss Roberts! [To MR. BAXTER.] I think you'd better put me down, dear—I feel you're giving way. [He lays her on the sofa. MISS ROBERTS arranges the cushions behind her head.] Thank you—just a little higher with the pillows; and mind you tuck up my toes. [MISS ROBERTS puts some wraps over her—she nods and smiles at TOM.] And what have you been doing all this week, Tom?

TOM.

[Gruffly, without looking up.] Mollusking.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Laughs and shakes her hand playfully at TOM.] How amusing Tom is. I don't understand half his jokes. [She sinks back on her cushions with a little gasp.] Oh, dear, how it tires me to come down stairs. I wonder if I ought to have made the effort.

[TOM laughs harshly.]

MR. BAXTER.

[Reprovingly.] Tom!

[MISS ROBERTS also looks reprovingly at TOM.]

MRS. BAXTER.

Have you no reverence for the sick?

TOM.

You make me sick.

MRS. BAXTER.

Miss Roberts, will you give me my salts, please?

MISS ROBERTS.

They're on the table beside you, Mrs. Baxter.

MRS. BAXTER.

Hand them to me, please. [MISS ROBERTS picks up the salts where they stand within easy reach of MRS. BAXTER if she would only stretch out her hand. MR. BAXTER makes an attempt to get the salts.] Not you, Dick; you stay this side, and hold them to my nose. The bottle is so heavy. [MISS ROBERTS gives the salts to MRS. BAXTER, who gives them to MR. BAXTER, who holds them to MRS. BAXTER'S nose.] Delicious!

TOM.

[Rising quickly and going towards MRS. BAXTER.] Let me hold it to your nose. I'll make it delicious.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Briskly.] No, thank you; take it away, Miss Roberts. I've had all I want.

[She gives the bottle to MISS ROBERTS.]

TOM.

I thought as much.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Feebly.] My fan.

MR. BAXTER.

[Anxiously.] A fan, Miss Roberts—a fan!

[MISS ROBERTS takes a fan and gives it to MR. BAXTER.

MRS. BAXTER.

Is there another fan?

MR. BAXTER.

[Anxiously.] Another fan, Miss Roberts—another fan!

[MISS ROBERTS gets another fan.

MRS. BAXTER.

If you could make the slightest little ruffle of wind on my right temple.

[MISS ROBERTS stands gently fanning MRS. BAXTER'S right temple. MR. BAXTER also fans her. TOM twists his newspaper into a fan.

TOM.

Would you like a ruffle of wind on your left temple?

MRS. BAXTER.

[Briskly.] No, no—no more fans—take them all away—I'm catching cold. [MISS ROBERTS takes the fan from MR. BAXTER and lays both fans on the table. MRS. BAXTER smiles feebly at MR. BAXTER and MISS ROBERTS. TOM goes back to his chair and sits.] My dear kind nurses!

MISS ROBERTS.

Is there anything else I can do for you?

MRS. BAXTER.

No, thank you. [They turn away.] Yes, hold my hand. [MISS ROBERTS holds her hand. Then to MR. BAXTER.] And you hold this one.

[MR. BAXTER holds MRS. BAXTER'S other hand. She closes her eyes.

TOM.

Would you like your feet held?

MR. BAXTER.

[Holding up his hands to silence TOM.] Hush, she's trying to sleep.

TOM.

[Going to her says in a hoarse whisper.] Shall I sing you to sleep?

[MR. BAXTER pushes TOM away. TOM resists.

MR. BAXTER.

Come away—she'll be better soon. [They leave her.] Oh, Tom, if you knew how I blame myself for this; it's all through me she's been brought so low; ever since the day she caught me comforting Miss Roberts. How she must have suffered, and she's been so sweet about it.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Opens her eyes.] I don't feel any better since I came down-stairs.

[MISS ROBERTS comes back to the sofa.]

MR. BAXTER.

I wish you'd see a doctor.

MRS. BAXTER.

As if a country doctor could diagnose me.

TOM.

Have a baronet from London.

MRS. BAXTER.

Later on, perhaps, unless I get well without.

TOM.

Then you do intend to recover?

MRS. BAXTER.

We hope, with care, that I may be able to get up and go about as usual in a few weeks' time.

TOM.

When I've gone back to Colorado? [He pushes MR. BAXTER out of the way and approaches MRS. BAXTER.] I guess you'd be very much obliged to me if I cured you.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Speaking rapidly and with surprising energy.] Yes, Tom, of course I should. But I've no confidence in you, and Dr. Ross once said a doctor could do nothing for a patient who had no confidence in him. [Smiling at TOM.] I'm so sorry, Tom; I wish I had confidence in you.

TOM.

I have confidence in myself enough for two.

MRS. BAXTER.

Dr. Ross said that wasn't at all the same thing. I wish you'd stand farther off; you make it so airless when you come so close.

[She waves him off with her hand.]

TOM.

I'm not going to touch you.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Relieved.] Oh, well, that's another matter. I thought you were going to force me up. Try to rather. Do what you like, as long as you don't touch me or make me drink anything I don't like. I mean that I ought not to have.

MR. BAXTER.

I wish we could think of some way to make our darling better.

TOM.

I've heard of people who couldn't get up having their beds set on fire.

[He picks up a box of matches and goes towards MRS. BAXTER. MR. BAXTER runs excitedly towards her to shield her.]

MR. BAXTER.

No, Tom—Miss Roberts!

[MISS ROBERTS also attempts to shield MRS. BAXTER.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[Taking a hand of MR. BAXTER and a hand of MISS ROBERTS—serenely.] My dear ones, he doesn't understand—he wouldn't really do it.

TOM.

Wouldn't he? [He puts the matches back.]

MRS. BAXTER.

To show him I'm not afraid, leave me alone with him.

TOM.

Going to try and get round me, too? That's no good.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Affectionately to MR. BAXTER and MISS ROBERTS.] You need a rest, I'm sure—both of you. Miss Roberts, will you go to the library for me, and change my book?

MISS ROBERTS.

With pleasure.

MRS. BAXTER.

Bring me something that won't tax my brain.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Soothingly.] Yes, yes, something trashy—very well. [She goes out.]

MR. BAXTER.

[Impulsively.] I need a walk too. I'll go with Miss Roberts. [About to follow her.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[Quickly pulling him back.] No, you won't, Dick. I want you to go up-stairs and move my furniture. The wash-stand gets all the sun, so I want the bed where the wash-stand is, and the wash-stand where the bed is. I wouldn't trouble you, dear, but I don't like to ask the servants to push such heavy weights.

MR. BAXTER.

I'll do anything, dear, to make you more comfortable.

MRS. BAXTER.

Do it quietly, so that I shan't be disturbed by the noise as I lie here. [Closes her eyes.]

MR. BAXTER.

Darling.

[He kisses her tenderly on the brow, then tiptoes to the stairs motioning TOM to keep quiet. TOM stamps heavily on the ground with both feet. MR. BAXTER, startled, signs to TOM to keep quiet; then goes out.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling and murmuring.] Dear Dick!

TOM.

Poor Dick!

MRS. BAXTER.

[Plaintively.] Poor Dulcie!

TOM.

Look here, Dulciebella, it's no use trying to get round me. I know you. I've seen you grow up. Why, even in your cradle you'd lie by the hour, gaping at the flies, as if the world contained nothing more important. I used to tickle you, to try and give you a new interest in life, but you never disturbed yourself till bottle time. And afterwards; don't I know every ruse by which you'd make other people run about, when you thought you were playing tennis, standing on the front line, tipping at any ball that came near enough for you to spoil—[he thumps the cushions] and then taking all the credit if your partner won the set. [Again he thumps the cushions. Each time MRS. BAXTER looks startled and attempts to draw them from him.] And if a ball was lost, would you help to look for it? [TOM gesticulates—MRS. BAXTER watches him in alarm.] Not you. You'd pretend you didn't see where it went. Those were the germs of mulluscry in infancy—and this is the logical conclusion—you lying there with a bow in your cap—[he flicks her cap with his hand] having your hands held.

MRS. BAXTER.

[In an injured tone.] You have no natural affection.

TOM.

I've a solid, healthy, brotherly affection for you, without a spark of romance.

MRS. BAXTER.

Other people are much kinder to me than you are.

TOM.

Other people only notice that you look pretty and interesting lying there—they wouldn't feel so sorry for you if you were ugly — [MRS. BAXTER smiles.] You know that; that's why you stuck that bow in your bonnet. [He flicks her cap again.] You can't fool me.

[Moves away.]

MRS. BAXTER.

[Sweetly yet maliciously.] No, dear, I saw that the morning you made me do the flowers.

TOM.

[Exasperated at the remembrance of his failure.] Get up! [Thumps the table.]

MRS. BAXTER.

I can't get up.

TOM.

Lots of people think every morning that they can't get up, but they do.

MRS. BAXTER.

Lots of people do lots of things I don't.

TOM.

How you can go on like this after what you saw—Dick and Miss Roberts a week ago—after the warning I gave you then. I thought the fundamental instinct in any woman was self-preservation, and that she would make every effort to keep her husband by her. You don't seem to care—to indulge your molluscry you throw those two more and more together.

MRS. BAXTER.

I don't see how you make that out.

TOM.

There they are, both spending the whole of their time waiting on you.

MRS. BAXTER.

In turns—never together—and I always have one or the other with me.

TOM.

[Taking it all in, he laughs and says with admiration and astonishment.] Oh! Oh! I see. Lie still, hold them both to you and hold them apart. That's clever.

MRS. BAXTER.

Your way was to pack Miss Roberts off; the result would have been that Dick would be sorry for her and blame me. My way, Dick is sorry for me, and blames himself, as long as Miss Roberts is here to remind him.

TOM.

You can't keep this game up forever.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Complacently.] When I feel comfortable in my mind that the danger has quite blown over—— [She suddenly remembers she is giving herself away too much.] Oh, but Tom, I hope you don't think I planned all this like a plot, and got ill on purpose?

TOM.

Who knows? It may have been a plot, or suggestions may have arisen like bubbles in the subconscious caverns of your mollusc nature.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Offended.] It was bubbles.

TOM.

You don't know which it was any more than anybody else. Think what this means for the others—there's your husband growing ill with anxiety, neglecting his business—your children running wild when they ought to be at school—Miss Roberts wasting her life in drudgery.

All of them sacrificed so that you may lie back and keep things as they are. But you can't keep things as they are; they'll get worse, unless you get on to yourself and buck up. It's that, or the break up of your home. Now Miss Roberts' presence in the house has ceased to be a danger—[MRS. BAXTER smiles] for the moment. But you wait! Wait till this invalid game is no longer a novelty, and Dick grows tired of being on his best behaviour—or wait till he finds himself in some trouble of his own, then see what happens. He won't turn to you, he'll spare you—he'll turn to his friend, his companion, the woman he has come to rely on—because you shirked your duties on to her, and pushed her into your place. And there you'll be left, lying, out of it, a cypher in your own home.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Pleasantly.] Do you know, Tom, I sometimes think you would have made a magnificent public speaker.

[TOM is angry. He conveys to the audience by his manner in the next part of the scene that he is trying a change of tactics. He sits.

TOM.

I wonder where those two are now ?

MRS. BAXTER.

Miss Roberts has gone to the library, and Dick is up-stairs moving my furniture.

TOM.

[Gazing up at the ceiling.] I haven't heard any noise of furniture being moved about.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Smiling.] I asked him to do it quietly.

TOM.

Miss Roberts has had more than time to go to the library and back.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Growing uneasy and sitting up.] You don't think he's gone too?

TOM.

[In an offhand way.] That's what I should do. Pretend to you I was going up-stairs to move furniture, and I should move out after her.

MRS. BAXTER.

It's the first time I've let them out of my sight together since—— [She sits bolt upright.] Go and see if they're coming.

[She points to the window.]

TOM.

They'd be careful not to be seen from this window.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Excitedly.] They may be in the harbour.

TOM.

It's a very good place.

MRS. BAXTER.

Go and look.

TOM.

I won't.

MRS. BAXTER.

Then I will!

[She springs off the couch and runs towards the window.]

TOM.

I thought I should make you get up.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Brought suddenly to realize what she has done.] Oh!

TOM.

Now that you are up, better go and look in the harbour.

MRS. BAXTER.

If I do catch them again, of course there will be only one thing for me to do.

TOM.

What's that ?

MRS. BAXTER.

The girls and I must come out and rough it with you in Colorado.

[She goes out through the window.]

TOM.

[Protesting vehemently.] No, you don't! I won't have that! Not at any price. There's no room for you in Colorado. Oh, dear! What a dreadful thought! [MISS ROBERTS comes in wearing her hat and carrying the library book in her hand.] Thank goodness, they were not in the arbour.

MISS ROBERTS.

What ?

TOM.

Oh, never mind, never mind.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Surprised at not seeing MRS. BAXTER on the couch.] Why, where is she ?

TOM.

Gone for a chase round the garden.

MISS ROBERTS.

A chase?

TOM.

A wild goose chase. Leave her alone—she needs exercise. You see I was right; she was mollusking.

MISS ROBERTS.

And she wasn't really ill?

TOM.

[Quickly.] Now seize this opportunity to give her notice. Have a plan. Know where you're going to or we shall have—"Dear Miss Roberts—stay with us till you find a place"—and the whole thing over again.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Taking off her hat, says thoughtfully.] I don't know where I can go at a moment's notice. I suppose you don't actually know of any one in Colorado who wants a governess?

TOM.

No, I can't say I do.

MISS ROBERTS.

Then I suppose it must be the Governesses' Home.

TOM.

[Kindly.] We shall hear from you from time to time, I hope?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Pleased.] Oh, yes, if you wish to.

TOM.

You'll write sometimes—[MISS ROBERTS looks up hopefully. But when he says "to my sister," she is disappointed] to my sister?

MISS ROBERTS.

[Disappointed.] Oh, yes.

TOM.

And in that way I shall hear of you.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Sadly.] If you remember to ask. But people so soon forget, don't they?

TOM.

I shan't forget. I don't want you to forget me.

MISS ROBERTS.

It won't make much difference to you in Colorado whether you're remembered or forgotten by me.

TOM.

I like to know there are people here and there in the world who care what happens to me.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Faltering.] That's something, isn't it?

TOM.

It's a real thing to a man who lives out of his own country; we spend a lot of time just thinking of the folks at home.

MISS ROBERTS.

Do you?

TOM.

[Looks at her face.] How young you are—there isn't a line in your face. [She smiles at him.] You will let me hear how you get on?
[Moves away.]

MISS ROBERTS.

[Disappointed.] If there's anything to tell. Some people have no history.

TOM.

Yours hasn't begun yet—your life is all before you.

MISS ROBERTS.

A governess's life isn't much.

TOM.

You won't always be a governess. You'll marry a young man, I suppose. I hope he'll be worthy of you.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Wistfully.] Would he have to be young for that?

TOM.

It's natural; I suppose it's right—anyway it can't be helped. A man doesn't realize that he's growing old with the rest of the world; he notices that his friends are. He can't see himself—so he doesn't notice that he, too—he gets a shock now and then—but . . . well, then he gets busy about something else and forgets.

MISS ROBERTS.

Forgets?

TOM.

Or tries to. I almost wish I'd never come to England. It was easier out there to get busy and forget.

MISS ROBERTS.

You'll find that easy enough when you go back.

TOM.

[Shaking his head.] Too much has happened; more than I can forget. But I must buck up because I have to be jolly as a duty to my neighbours, and then your letters—they'll cheer me. And when that inevitable letter arrives to tell me you've found happiness, I shall send you my kindest thoughts and best wishes, and try not to curse the young devil whoever he is. So you see we can always be friends, can't we? In spite of the blunder I made a week ago. Don't quite forget me—[taking her hands and shaking them] when he comes along.

[He goes and sits on the couch disconsolately.]

MISS ROBERTS.

Shall I tell you something?

TOM.

What?

MISS ROBERTS.

Oh, no—I can't!

TOM.

You must now you've begun.

MISS ROBERTS.

I daren't.

TOM.

I want you to.

MISS ROBERTS.

Well, don't look at me.

TOM.

I'm ready.

[He looks at her, and then turns his back to her.]

MISS ROBERTS.

Suppose there was a girl, quite young, and not bad looking, and she knew that her chief value as a person was her looks and her youth, and a man—oh, I don't know how to say this——

TOM.

I'm not looking.

MISS ROBERTS.

He had great value as a person. He was kind and sensible, and brave, and he had done things. He wasn't young, but he couldn't have lived and still had a smooth face, so she liked him all the better for not having a smooth face—his face meant things to a girl, and if he wanted to give her so much—such great things—don't you think she'd be proud to give him her one little possession, her looks and her youth?

TOM.

You don't mean us? [He turns to her.]

MISS ROBERTS.

[Overcome with confusion.] Don't look at me. I'm ashamed. [Covers her face with her hands. TOM goes to her, gently draws her hands from her face and holds them both in his.] I wouldn't have dared to tell you only I couldn't let you go on thinking what you were thinking. When you asked me to marry you a week ago and I said "No"—it was only because I was so hurt—my pride was hurt and I thought—oh, never mind now—I wanted to say "Yes" all the time.

TOM.

[Looking at her and saying to himself, as if he scarcely believed it.] I am really going to take her with me to Colorado.

[Kisses her. After a slight pause, MR. BAXTER enters limping painfully.]

MR. BAXTER.

I've sprained my ankle—moving that wash-stand.

TOM.

Oh, my poor old chap—what can we do for you?

MISS ROBERTS.

You ought to have some lint and a bandage.
[To TOM.] You'll find it in a cupboard in the spare room—your room.

TOM.

All right—hold on while I go and get it.
[He puts MR. BAXTER'S hand on the post of the stairs ; then he goes out.]

MISS ROBERTS.

Hold on to me, Mr. Baxter.
[She supports him. MRS. BAXTER enters from the garden without seeing MR. BAXTER and MISS ROBERTS.]

MRS. BAXTER.

They're not in the arbour. [Catching sight of them.] What again?

MISS ROBERTS.

He's sprained his ankle.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Rushing to him.] Sprained his ankle—oh, my poor Dick!

MR. BAXTER.

[Looking surprised at MRS. BAXTER.] What, you up—running about?

MRS. BAXTER.

I've taken a sudden turn for the better.

MR. BAXTER.

[Mournfully.] I wish you'd taken it a bit sooner ; making me move that damned old wash-stand. [Then suddenly.] Oh, my foot !

MRS. BAXTER.

Let me help you to my couch.

[TOM comes in with bandages.

MR. BAXTER.

You wouldn't know how. [Pushes her away. MRS. BAXTER gives an exclamation of horror. Turning to MISS ROBERTS.] Miss Roberts !

MRS. BAXTER.

Let me !

MR. BAXTER.

No, no—not now. [As MISS ROBERTS assists him to the sofa.] You see, she's used to helping people, and you're not.

[MISS ROBERTS kneels and begins to untie his shoe-lace.

MRS. BAXTER.

[To TOM.] He refuses my help.

TOM.

He turns to the woman he has come to rely on. Now is your chance. Seize it; you may never get another.

MR. BAXTER.

I want a pillow for my foot.

MISS ROBERTS.

[Rising.] A pillow for your foot?

TOM.

[To MRS. BAXTER.] Go on—go on—get it.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Running for the pillow.] A pillow for his foot. [She anticipates MISS ROBERTS, snatches the pillow and brings it to MR. BAXTER, then looking indignantly at MISS ROBERTS she raises MR. BAXTER'S sprained foot with one hand as she places the pillow under it with the other. MR. BAXTER utters a yell of pain.] Oh, my poor Dick, I'm so sorry. Did I hurt you?

MR. BAXTER.

[Looking at her in wonder.] Why, Dulcie, but it seems all wrong for me to be lying here, while you wait on me.

MRS. BAXTER.

I want you to rely on me, dear, so that when you're in trouble, you'll turn to me. What can I do for your poor foot? We must get some—some —

TOM.

Bandages.

[Throwing bandages to MRS. BAXTER.

MRS. BAXTER.

Yes, and some—some arnica. Miss Roberts never thought of arnica.

MISS ROBERTS.

I'll go and look for it.

[She makes a slight movement.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Pleasantly.] Don't trouble, Miss Roberts, I will go myself directly. [Then to MR. BAXTER.] You know, dear, we must learn to do without Miss Roberts.

TOM.

You'll have to. She's coming back to Colorado with me.

MRS. BAXTER.

[Going to MISS ROBERTS.] Tom, this is news. Dear Miss Roberts, I'm so glad.

MR. BAXTER.

[Holding out his hand to TOM.] So am I.

[TOM shakes hands with MR. BAXTER.]

MRS. BAXTER.

But oh, how we shall miss you.

MISS ROBERTS.

I hope I'm not being selfish!

MRS. BAXTER.

Oh, no, no, dear. I'm glad you're going to make Tom happy. We shall do very well here; it's high time the children went to school. I've been thinking about it for a long time. [She kneels by MR. BAXTER.] And now that I'm so much better, I shall be able to do more for my husband, play chess with him—go walks with him —— Tom shall never have another chance to call me a mollusc.

TOM.

Bravo! Bravo!

MR. BAXTER.

Dulcie!

MRS. BAXTER.

Dearest!

MISS ROBERTS.

[To Tom.] You've worked a miracle!

TOM.

[Quietly to Miss Roberts.] Were those miracles permanent cures? [Shakes his head.]
We're never told! We're never told!
